Le colloque 'La métropole canadienne en mutation' avait pour but de discuter des questions de politique sociale touchant de près les agglomérations canadiennes. Il a rassemblé des universitaires, des hauts fonctionnaires des trois paliers de gouvernement, ainsi que des représentants du Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto. Le colloque s'est déroulé sous forme d'une discussion intense qui ont tenté de répondre aux questions préparées à l'avance. Ces questions portaient sur les défis les plus importants de la mise en oeuvre de programmes sociaux, l'équilibre entre la ville et la banlieue sur le plan des services pour les défavorisés, la politique sociale, et le rôle du secteur privé pour la prestation de services sociaux. • CA MU ON SA

Migration and the urban housing market : executive summary

by F.T. Denton, A.L. Robb and B.G. Spencer. Ottawa : Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, 1991. 11, 9 p. Bilingual (La Migration et le marché...).
MICROLOG 92-07084 1 fiche

Three studies have been carried out as components of this project on migration as a source of instability in the housing sector. The concern in all three is with the impact of population change on the housing market, and specifically with short-run (especially year-to-year) variations. The markets of chief interest are those of Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver, but Edmonton, Winnipeg and Halifax are included also, largely for comparative purposes. The availability and accuracy of data for those centres imposed some constraints on the studies. Nevertheless it has been possible to extract what is hoped to be a considerable amount of useful information.

Trois études ont été réalisées dans le cadre de ce projet d'examen de la migration comme source d'instabilité dans le secteur du logement. Ces études portent sur l'effet du changement de la composition de la population sur le marché du logement, plus précisément les variations à court terme d'année en année. Les marchés les plus intéressants sont ceux de Toronto, Montréal et Vancouver, quoique ceux d'Edmonton, Winnipeg et Halifax soient aussi étudiés, principalement à des fins de comparaison. La justesse des données descriptives sur ces agglomérations ont imposé certaines contraintes à l'étude, mais il a été toutefois possible d'en tirer une abondance de renseignements utiles.

This study describes the Ida Point gold showing in the Archean Hope Bay greenstone belt in the Slave province as a structurally controlled lode gold showing. It demonstrates the effect of the competency of the host rocks on the controls of the gold mineralization in an Archean metavolcanic setting and provides insights into the characterization of the metallogenic aspects.

The Selbaie mine (Les Mines Selbaie), which in its earlier years was known as the Detour deposit, is about 180 km north of Noranda and about 80 km northwest of Joutel in northern Quebec. The deposit was discovered in 1974 and began production in 1981, producing copper, silver, gold and zinc. A petrographic and mineralogical study of rocks and tailings from the Selbaie mine was undertaken as a component of a broader investigation to evaluate whether acid mine drainage from Selbaie waste rock can be neutralized or minimized by combining this rock with the available non-reactive sulphide tailings. This study analyzed two sample bags of tailings collected in September 1991 and eight bags representing the major waste-rock types of welded andesitic tuff, intermediate volcanics, rhyodacitic breccia, and pyrite rich rock collected in October 1991. Tests using optical microscopy, X-ray diffractometry, image analysis, and electron-microprobe analysis were conducted.

Two samples, one from the CIP tails and the other from leach tank no. 8, from the David Bell circuit of Teck-Corona Operation Corp were studied to determine the gold liberation size and mineral associations of locked gold grains. Sieved fractions were subjected to heavy liquid separations, and the sink products were examined by ore microscopy and scanning electron microscopy to identify the minerals and to determine mineral associations. Selected grains were analyzed with the electron microprobe to determine mineral compositions.

The Delnite mine near Timmins, Ontario, processed approximately 3.5 million tonnes of gold ore during its 27-year lifespan to closure in 1964. The Delnite provided an opportunity to study the behaviour of arsenic in a carbonate-buffered geochemical system. An earlier report on the mineralogy of Delnite cores from site D1 was published in 1991. This report gives a more complete record of the results from D1, and also presents data for site D5.

MICROLOG 92-06339 1 fiche

Between October and December 1991, the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources undertook a study on sustainable energy and mineral development. The Committee invited a number of industry organizations to submit reports reflecting their concerns. This document gives the submission of the Mineral Policy Sector of Energy, Mines and Resources Canada. The presentation is divided into a brief description of the size and importance of the minerals industry in Canada, the key issues and concerns with minerals and the environment, and examples of how the Mineral Policy Sector and EMR are responding to the issues. The main concerns are identified as acid mine drainage and other water quality problems, reclamation, acid rain, the health effects of minerals, recycling, and land access/use.

Use of the current Canadian Forces nuclear, biological, and chemical (NBC) protective unit in warm environments shows that the soldier can be subjected to considerable heat stress. New concepts in NBC protective ensembles that are less heat stressful yet provide adequate chemical protection for the soldier are being explored. One key aspect of this work is the prediction of the heat stress incurred while working in these garments. This report presents data on heat and moisture transport from a person working in a hot environment while wearing various NBC ensembles. A simple resistive electrical circuit analogy was used, with the heat capacity of the body used to predict core and skin temperature changes, although the capacitive effects are ignored. The analysis allows for work-rest cycles of specified durations and intensities; specified but constant ambient temperature and relative humidity; and specified thermal and water vapour resistance properties of the NBC ensembles.

The provision of power to the six remote sites on the High Arctic Data Communications System (HADCS) is very expensive due to the need for high reliability and the cost of transportation. In 1984, experiments were initiated to examine the feasibility of using a photovoltaic (PV)/battery system to supplement the non-rechargeable zinc-air batteries being used. As part of these experiments, an extensive data base of the availability of solar energy on a horizontal and an 80 degree south-facing inclined surface was collected and used to assess the suitability of various models to predict solar irradiance. This technical note proposes a new method for the subdivision of global radiation into direct and diffuse components when the solar elevation angle is small (less than 10 degrees).

Activities to accompany a videocassette designed to alert students to the importance of modern language study for their future careers. In the videocassette, several people who use their knowledge of languages in their jobs are interviewed. The activities are divided into 3 main sections corresponding to 3 levels of difficulty, basic, general, and advanced. The activities include discussion topics, role playing and follow-up. The advanced level contains additional group and research activities. Teacher information on types of careers, a videotape assessment form, a selection of newspaper articles to be used as resources, and a copy of the videocassette script, are also included.

This interlaboratory study was commissioned to evaluate the capability of labs to measure the common sewer-use parameters of biochemical oxygen demand, suspended solids, pH, and phosphorus. The study assessed the relative performance of the labs for the accuracy and precision of their parameters and identified deficiencies in specific analytical methods, where possible, within the limits of the experimental design. A total of 92 laboratories participated in the study, of which 52 were provincial, municipal or regional government facilities, and the remaining 40 were commercial, industrial, or university facilities. The overall response was about 90 percent. Data was reviewed for precision, accuracy, and bias with conclusions and recommendations on the current state of laboratory performance.

This interlaboratory study was commissioned to evaluate the capability of labs to analyze sewage treatment plant effluents for trace metal concentrations for the future regulatory needs of the Ontario Ministry of the Environment in the Municipal and Industrial Strategy for Abatement (MISA) program. The study involved 13 metals (Be, Al, V, Cr, Co, Ni, Cu, Zn, Mo, Ag, C, Ti, and Pb) along with suggested minimum concentration values for each metal. A set of four samples were prepared with varying concentrations of the target metals. These samples were submitted to 48 municipal and commercial laboratories for analysis. Of the participants, 78 percent responded with complete data, which was then statistically evaluated for accuracy, precision, individual and group lab performance.

This paper describes the object-oriented language Mondel, an executable specification language with a formally defined semantics that supports persistency and concurrency. The paper discusses issues related to the choice of the language and proposes a methodology to guide the designer during the development of a specification. Mondel and the methodology are illustrated by a simple database example. An overview of the formal semantics of Mondel and its use for the development of an execution environment, and for the formal verification of Mondel specifications using techniques from coloured Petri nets are also given. The development of a reflective language definition is also discussed.

This study was performed as part of the Darlington Nuclear Generating Station commissioning and post-operational environmental assessment studies to evaluate the effectiveness of the precast porous bottom (PPB) intake design at reducing fish losses due to impingement. Three video systems and a scanning sonar were tested and evaluated, with the equipment operated from a vessel moored over the intake surface. Video monitoring consisted of a mobile submersible (ROV), a stationary camera enclosed in a submersible housing, and a diver-operated housed camcorder. The ROV was used to patrol the intake surface seeking fish encounters, was parked in a stationary monitoring position, and was used to explore the forebay channel and tunnel exit to determine possible fish residency and entrapment. This report describes the results of the monitoring.

Les modèles morphologiques à états finis sont des formalismes servant à décrire l'ensemble des formes valides de mots d'une langue naturelle et conviennent bien à la mise en oeuvre informatique. Aussi ont-ils été souvent utilisés pour créer des systèmes qui reconnaissent et génèrent efficacement des formes de mots isolés. Dans cet article, l'auteur présente le modèle morphologique à deux niveaux de Koskeniemi, puis le compare à d'autres approches. L'intégration de tels modèles dans des systèmes de traitement de langues naturelles travaillant sur des phrases suppose en général que l'élément morphologique soit modifié afin qu'il s'applique à des textes continus. L'auteur expose comment ce passage des mots isolés à des textes continus peut être effectué et montre, qu'en plus des phénomènes orthographiques normalement décrits par les modèles morphologiques, le système résultant présente des propriétés intéressantes pour la description des phénomènes 'inter-mots', tels que l'élosion et la contraction.

This paper presents the specification and simulation properties of the MSG model of the Canadian economy. It considers the impact of changes in Canadian monetary and fiscal policies and draws a distinction between the short-run and long-run effects of these policies. It also makes a distinction between temporary, permanent, anticipated, and unanticipated policy changes. In addition, the paper considers the impact on Canada of a fiscal expansion and a monetary expansion in the United States, as well as the effects on Canada of a permanent fall in the world supply of oil and rise in productivity in Canada.

A detailed multi-media geochemical study was conducted over the Canfield Creek Cu-Ag deposit of north central Nova Scotia during the 1990 field season. A series of 10 trenches were excavated at 100-250 m spacing along a NS-trending road over the deposit. Till samples were collected at about 1-2 m intervals in each trench. In addition to the trenching program 20 reconnaissance sample sites were established in a 50 sq km area around the deposit. Samples collected at each site included balsam fir, organic humus soil in the A layer, and unweathered till taken below the B soil horizon. Samples of humus and balsam fir were also collected at each trench site, when available. Several media were submitted for multi-element analysis by the inductively coupled plasma-atomic emission spectroscopy method. These include -230 mesh fraction of till, non-magnetic heavy mineral separates from the -60'230 mesh fraction of till, ashed balsam fir, and -80 fraction of A soil horizon. Analytical results for Cu, Pb, Zn and Ag are plotted in a series of figures and cumulative probability plots are presented for these elements for each sample media.

A detailed multi-media geochemical study was conducted over the east zone of the Yava lead deposit of southeastern Cape Breton Island during the 1990 field season. Samples collected included Balsam fir and/or black spruce; A1 horizon (organic humus) soil layer; unweathered till taken below the B soil horizon; and stream sediment samples. An overburden drilling program was undertaken in conjunction with the grid survey to investigate the glacial stratigraphy in the vicinity of the Yava deposit. Logs are given for the three completed drill holes. Several media were submitted for multi-element analysis by the inductively coupled plasma-atomic emission spectroscopy method, including -230 mesh fraction of till and stream sediment samples, non-magnetic heavy mineral separates from the -60'230 mesh fraction of till and stream sediment samples, ashed Balsam fir, and -80 fraction of A1 soil horizon. Analytical results are presented in a series of tables, selected trend surface plots are presented for the grid data, and selected plots are displayed for stream data.

This study is intended to serve as a resource to educational institutions in the country. It provides examples of policies and programs undertaken at the elementary and secondary levels and their supervisor jurisdictions. The survey was designed to assess how the conceptual framework for promoting racial and cultural equity becomes translated into programs and practices. The central focus of the research was to present those initiatives that have been pursued and appear to have been effective in promoting racial and cultural equity within the major areas of the educational process including: curriculum, pedagogy, professional development, personnel practices and school/community relations.

In September 1986 ministers representing the then 92 member nations of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT) met in Punta del Este, Uruguay, to discuss reforms to the international trading system. Agreement was reached for the formal launching of an eighth round of multilateral trade negotiations. These negotiations are the most complex and difficult ever attempted, and many believe that survival of an open trade system could be at stake. Previous trade liberalization rounds have stimulated growth and competitiveness, and Canada stands to gain from the strengthening of GATT rules in many areas. This review examines the threats to the GATT system, the major negotiating issues in the Uruguay round, and the Canadian position in these negotiations.

Statistics Canada currently uses the New York State Identification and Intelligence Systems as a surname encoding scheme for all computerized long-term follow-up studies carried out. A number of projects have indicated that at least 1-2 percent of mortality (death) links are lost because of problems with this encoding scheme. This report describes the initial steps required in making an assessment of the measures necessary to make the encoding scheme more efficient. The report reviewed the effectiveness of other available encoding schemes for matching surnames; the effectiveness of performing a second pass of linked files using and comparing different matching criteria; and the advantages of using similar encoding schemes for matching forenames.

Native People's Circle on environment and development draft report

Ontario Round Table on Environment and Economy. Native People's Circle. Toronto : The Round Table, 1991. ii, 35 p. Bibliogr. MICROLOG 92-01418 1 fiche

This report is one in a series prepared for the Ontario Round Table on Environment and Economy, established in 1988 by the Government of Ontario to create a sustainable development strategy for the province. The Native People's Circle on Environment and Development was set up to present the views of the native community on the ways in which the provincial government could help Aboriginal people develop strong local economies, preserve the environment, and participate more fully in decisions which affect their communities. This draft report presents information on transportation, energy and mines, forestry, agriculture and food, urban development and commerce, and manufacturing as they relate to Aboriginal economies; such key issues as trapping, fishing, the service sector, subsidies, and non-cash activities; legal and political issues, such as land claims, treaty rights, constitutional change and self government, and access to Crown land and resources; and the key themes in sustainable development. ## Native teachers as counsellors of Native children : a needs assessment and workshop

Suggests, promotes a design/plan for professional development which results in workshops that are both satisfying and useful. The predominantly native staff of a senior elementary school on a large Southern Ontario Indian reserve took part in a needs assessment and workshop to facilitate implementation of part of a school guidance plan. The counselling component of the plan was important, given the need for pupil counselling and the high degree of cultural empathy that was present in the native staff. A needs assessment of both administrative and teacher needs was conducted, including a comprehensive needs survey. The survey was found to be valuable in yielding information about teachers' needs in terms of professional development for the counselling role they will be expected to incorporate into their interaction with the students. The workshop plan was developed, based on the needs assessment, through a consultative process. This resulted in a workshop emphasizing communication, empathy, group cohesiveness, and an invitational stance to the counselling relationship. Evaluation of the workshop indicated a high degree of satisfaction on both personal and professional levels. Participants reported increased related skills and became more informed in the legal aspects of counselling. ED NP ON PR

In October 1989, Conoco Ltd. was granted petroleum exploration rights to selected portions of the Fraser Valley. They have now requested approval to drill a natural gas well in the area. Conoco is entitled to drill the well, provided they meet all the necessary requirements to ensure public safety and environmental security. Since no exploratory drilling has occurred in the Fraser Valley since 1963, this booklet was prepared to answer questions likely to arise. It gives a brief description of the sequences of activities leading to a drilling application and well drilling, as well as answering questions on drilling operations and emergency planning.

This document is part of the National Energy Board's ongoing monitoring of the natural gas market. It focuses on a specific part of the structure and functioning of the Canadian natural gas market, that of long-term contracts of over five years duration. The report analyzes the changes that have occurred in long-term contracts governing the sale of western Canadian gas into domestic and export markets and identifies the important trends in contracting practices that have emerged since deregulation. The analysis is based on more than 165 domestic and export contracts representing the first arm's length or primary sale between a party representing producer interests and a party representing consumer interests.

A number of plants have been found to contain naturally occurring herbicide-like chemicals that can leak out of a plant and control plant growth or even kill other plants close by. This effect is called allelopathy. This project was conducted to determine whether the crop residue of canola, or the killed young growth of sweetclover or canola (used as cover crops) contains natural herbicides, and whether these could aid in the control of green foxtail, kochia, and wild oats, all weeds. Leaving the crop residue or killed cover crop on the soil surface would also leave the soil well protected against wind and water erosion.

Simultaneously, it addresses methodological, theoretical, and evaluation issues in NLG. The goal of the paper is to provide an explanation of how the diversity of research objectives, methodologies, and influences in NLG can be systematically reconciled and understood in a way that gives unity to the discipline, and how the understanding so obtained can be taken into account in devising procedures for evaluating NLG systems or theories.

Two light spectra that look the same even though the spectra themselves are different are called metamers and are said to be metameric to one another. This paper proposes and tests several methods for recovering a complete spectrum given only a colour camera's RGB measurement of it as input. The paper then compares the accuracy of this method of converting to tristimulus coordinated from RGB signals to one based on Horn's work on the exact reproduction of coloured images. The new method relies on expanding the colour signal as a series in terms of a linear combination of basis functions.

The natural network is a land planning concept that uses an hexagonal grid as a basis for the layout of roads and services. This study was conducted to investigate the concept of natural networking as an approach to residential land development; to undertake both a general analysis as applied to large scale area planning and a detailed analysis as applied to a small scale residential subdivision; to analyze the adaptability of this form of subdivision to accommodate natural environmental occurrences that could potentially restrict development; and to assess the regulatory and legislative feasibility of applying the natural network concept in Alberta. A detailed cost analysis for each one of the infrastructure components was made against that of a conventional subdivision.

This paper presents part of the results of a recently completed research project on safety belts. The study concentrates on cervical injuries, mainly neck sprains, sustained by belted and unbelted front seat occupants involved in two-car crashes. Data were obtained from the Société de l'assurance automobile du Québec (SAAQ), which covers all road accidents with injuries that occur in the province of Quebec. Data files were constructed by linking computer files containing victim information from insurance claims, police accident reports, car registrations, and drivers' licences. Additional information on injury descriptions including pains and updates to these descriptions for at least one year after the crash was added from medical records and accident configurations from police records at the SAAQ. The injuries were coded using the International Classification of Diseases and their severity was quantified with the Abbreviated Injury Scale. Similar accidents were grouped together according to authorized speed limit, vehicle weight, and crash configuration. A loglinear model was then constructed for the odds ratio.

General conclusions drawn from the qualitative analysis were: prior knowledge (based on the frequency and cognate status of input stimuli) did not appear to affect subjects' responses, exact status of the class of alternating verbs could be decided by a number of different clues (length, stress, irregular past tense marking) each of which might interact with correction. How a subject might use those clues to decide if a verb alternates or not is unknown. Bibliography, figures, tables, and 2 appendices are included.

The Nepisiguit-Chaleur Region occupies the western part of Gloucester County. The region currently operates a regional sanitary landfill site in the remote unpopulated area of Red Pine Station, located along Route 360 west of Allardville and south of Bathurst. Residential wastes are collected at roadside by the five incorporated municipalities and direct hauled to the regional landfill site. This analysis examines the cost to the Nepisiguit-Chaleur Region of using existing residential waste haulers vs larger scale regional collection systems. The analysis uses the SWATMODEL 2.0 collection system evaluation runs to evaluate two runs, the first taking in municipal and four rural area zones, and the second taking in four regional zones. The costs determined are for residential waste collection and delivery services to the landfill site only and do not include tipping fees or site access road infrastructure construction costs. Commercial and industrial waste and collection services are not included. No provincial funding of operations or capital are included in the costs.

A New coding technique for spectral shaping of data

Spectrum shaping codes introduce redundancy and correlation into a transmitted data stream in order to alter the transmitted spectrum without affecting the pulse shape or peak-to-average power ratio. Most are based on algebraic properties, or on a running digital sum. This paper introduces a new and very general approach to spectral shaping, in which the Viterbi algorithm is employed at the transmitter to minimize the transmitted power in specified bands. The principal advantage is greatly increased flexibility of width, depth, and placement of spectral notches. The computational load at the transmitter is greater than that of earlier algorithms, although the receiver is unaffected.

This study examines from an American perspective the impact of the free trade agreement (FTA) on the evolution of the Canada-United States economic relationship. It puts into historical context the special trading relationship between Canada and the United States which prevailed over the early postwar period. It examines how FTA rules and dispute settlement procedures create an effective basis for managing bilateral economic relationships in the context of more decentralized policy processes. It also explores the potential impact on the bilateral trading regime of the changing nature of international competition, the adjustments taking place in the structure of the Canadian and American economies, and the challenges posed by continuing technological change.

Good quality seismic data depends on the length, shape and consistency of the downgoing acoustic pulse, as well as on an ability to alter the pulse in a controlled manner. This paper describes an acoustic source based on the common sparker source routinely used in sub-bottom profiling. The device has a multi-electrode sparker that emits a minimum phase, reproducible signal with a higher frequency, and a broader bandwidth than the conventional sparker. It was developed specifically for the unique requirements of a stationary high resolution geophysical site surveying tool. Examples of field data are also included.

The Niagara 25 Hz system is one of two remaining pockets of 25 Hz load/generation embedded in the Ontario Hydro 60 Hz system. The system is supplied primarily by generation located at the Sir Adam Beck I (SAB I) plant and the Ontario Power (OP) plant located on the Niagara River system. As of March 1991, there were four 25 Hz units at the SAB I plant (installed capacity of 200 MVA) and 12 small 25 Hz units at the OP plant (installed capacity of 100 MVA). On March 4 and 5, 1991, a series of staged tests were performed to study the behaviour of the 25 Hz system while operating as an electrical island with as few as two SAB I generators synchronized to the system. This report describes the islanded

Freshwater mussels, filamentous algae, and young forage fish have been routinely monitored on the Niagara River since 1980. The use of leeches as biomonitors for chlorinated phenols was begun in 1987. The 1987 biomonitoring study was designed to provide an update to previous surveys and to identify the potential of other sites and tributaries to contribute contaminants to the Niagara River. Mussels and leeches collected from uncontaminated inland lakes were placed in the Niagara River in cages at specific locations, and resident Cladophora and bottom sediments were collected to identify contaminant sources or source areas requiring more detailed follow-up investigations based on uptake of contaminants in selection biomonitors; to compare these results with ongoing long-term trace contaminant monitoring with indigenous species (spottail shiners, Cladophora) and identify spatial and temporal trends; and to augment ongoing upstream/downstream Niagara River toxic management plan programs by providing information on contaminant levels in the river between Fort Erie and Niagara-on-the-Lake. This report presents the results of a study to estimate the costs of reducing emissions of NOx and VOCs from stationary or point-sources such as petrochemical producers, oil refineries, and thermo-electric generating plants in Sarnia and the Hamilton-Toronto-Oshawa metropolitan regions. The study determined the major stationary sources and quantities of NOx and VOC emissions; projected future emissions for specified sectors and regions; identified abatement technologies and systems; estimated capital and operating costs for applicable technologies for each source and used these data to develop abatement cost functions for stationary sources; and estimated the costs of achieving three abatement scenarios by stationary sources.

The Northern Oil and Gas Action Program B.2 program was established in 1984 to study marine and estuarine habitats on the Canadian Beaufort Sea shelf. As part of the study, both biological and chemical water properties of samples collected through the ice in March and May and from the MV Sequel from July to September during the open water season were measured. This report presents all the chemical oceanographic measurements made from 1984-88. A total of 565 water samples were collected from 201 stations and as many as 17 chemical determinations were made on each sample. Chemical measurements included nitrate, soluble reactive silicate, total dissolved nitrogen, soluble reactive phosphate, dissolved inorganic and organic carbon, particulate carbon, phosphorus and nitrogen, conductance, pH, alkalinity, chlorophyll, dissolved oxygen, and total suspended solids.

As part of the Northern Oil and Gas Action Program (NOGAP) B.6 program (Beaufort Sea Oceanography), conducted to determine hydrocarbon pathways and primary productivity of the waters overlying the Mackenzie Shelf, an ice-based spring sampling program was conducted from April 23-May 11, 1991. Water properties (physical, chemical and biological) were measured on a number of transects from Herschel Island in the west to Cape Bathurst in the east. Particular emphasis was placed on determining the disposition of the Mackenzie River plume under the ice in the nearshore and its influence on water properties. This report presents physical measurements (CTD data) and chemical measurements (salinity, dissolved oxygen, orthophosphate, nitrate, reactive silicate, and chlorophyll a).

As part of a major inter-disciplinary study to measure hydrocarbons and the primary productivity over the Beaufort Shelf, four types of sediment traps were deployed from spring 1987 to spring 1988 to collect a complete year's data for particle fluxes over the Mackenzie Shelf. Sequential sediment traps (Honjo and Baker design) and multi-traps (multiple, baffled cylinders) were used for vertical fluxes and Kenney traps (closed, stacked cylinders with side ports) were used to capture particles moving horizontally. Water properties (biological, chemical and physical) were measured and a chemical analysis for total mass, C, N, Chl a, Si, P, Al, Fe, Ca, and zooplankton composition of the traps' contents was conducted.

Direct observations of organisms in the field is often necessary for an understanding of the intensity of various selective forces, and to evaluate how often in nature an organism finds itself in situations created in the laboratory. Time-lapse video monitoring allows detailed, direct observations over long periods, so that the frequency of even relatively rare events can be estimated. This paper identifies the most important characteristics of the equipment necessary for underwater time-lapse monitoring, pointing out the characteristics of the currently available equipment that most limit performance. The focus is on technical requirements, rather than on the capabilities of currently available equipment. Some comparisons of cameras are provided to illustrate the range of capabilities available. Where possible, suggestions for low-cost substitutes for commercially available equipment are made. The assembly of an infrared lighting system is described and one test of its non-obtrusiveness is given. Cost estimates for off-the-shelf and self-assembled systems are given and a list of current components in Canada and the United States are included.

On 24 September 1990, Trade Minister John Crosbie announced that Canada would enter into talks with the United States and Mexico in the hope of creating a North American free-trade zone, a market of over 350 million people. While an enlarged North American trade area offers opportunities for Canadian manufacturers, there is concern that the wage differentials between the two countries will have a significantly adverse effect on Canadian employments. Liberalized trade between Mexico and the United States and lower Mexican wage rates have already resulted in substantial investments on the border between those two countries. The creation of enterprise zones in Mexico has attracted considerable investments not only from American and Canadian firms, but also from other nations that seek to remain cost competitive in the global economy. This paper examines the phenomenon of the 'maquiladoras' or Mexican enterprise zones that were created to encourage foreign investments in Mexico.

Northern Lakes Fish Monitoring Program : Limestone and Hanson Lakes, 1989

by B.L. Gloutney. Regina : Saskatchewan Parks and Renewable Resources Fisheries Branch, 1991. viii, 52 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Fisheries technical report ; 91-2) MICROLOG 92-00732 1 fiche

Limestone and Hanson Lakes were testnetted in the summer of 1989 to evaluate the current status of their respective sport fisheries. Results from the testnetting were compared to the most recent detailed investigation from 1965 and 1966 to determine the current status of the resource, using the results as the basis for future management of the stocks. Among the multitude of chip and board-level design-for-testability techniques proposed, implemented, and in some cases adopted as standards, the built-in self-test (BIST) is emerging as one of the most promising solutions for testing large and complex integrated circuits. This paper presents a generalization regarding the aliasing probability associated with signature analysis for multiple-output circuits under tests which would apply to multiple input signature registers and cellular automata. The paper presents a summary of related work; some definitions and linear algebraic notions used to prove the principal results of the paper; the properties of linear compactors that are characterized by irreducible polynomials and the probabilistic implications of the theorems; and further discussion of the results, including comments on other approaches taken recently to prove less general results than those presented.

Au printemps 1989, le gouvernement a adopté une nouvelle politique en matière d'information foncière pour le Nouveau-Brunswick. Le but de cette politique était de coordonner les mesures gouvernementales touchant la gestion de l'information géographique, et de faire converger les efforts du gouvernement, du secteur privé et des établissements d'enseignement concernés. Le gouvernement a donc créé la Corporation d'information géographique, ayant comme principaux mandats d'améliorer la gestion des ressources naturelles et de stimuler la croissance économique grâce à des produits et des services d'information pouvant être commercialisés. This paper presents a novel state estimator design scheme for linear dynamical systems driven by partially unknown inputs. It is assumed that there is absolutely no information available about the unknown inputs, and thus unlike a number of past studies, no a priori assumption is made about the nature of these inputs. A simple approach for designing a reduced order unknown input observer with pole placement capability is proposed.

Results of a project to discover whether the air blast injector concept could be used successfully in a conventional design of a heavy-duty engine operating on methanol fuel. The test engine used was a two-cylinder Detroit Diesel 2-71 two-stroke unit, similar in design to the Detroit Diesel engines in the MILE project buses at Medicine Hat and Winnipeg which had been most prone to injector plugging problems during MILE operations. The modified injector was fitted into the test engine with the necessary hardware and engine modifications to enable operation on methanol fuel. Performance figures were analyzed and compared, particularly for power and torque development, exhaust emissions levels, and deterioration of injector performance.

This paper examines the tremendous increase in our knowledge of recently identified peptides (toxins and bioregulators) that control biological activity and identifies such potential dangers as changes in potential military utility, proliferation, novel toxins and bioregulators as incapacitating agents, and extrapolation of current technological trends. The paper concludes with the implications of such changes for the Biological and Toxin Weapons Convention. CA EX

This report is a bibliographic NTS location and author index to all the Nova Scotia Department of Mines and Energy and the Dept. of Natural Resources, Mines and Energy branches mineral and petroleum assessment reports, contribution series, open files, and publications that became available between 1 January and 31 December 1991. The location index is a hierarchical, geographic index, organized and sorted on the basis of the national topographic system (NTS) of map sheets. The claim reference map systems is used by the Nova Scotia Dept. of Natural Resources for map staking of mineral exploration claims. Also included are two additional geographic groupings called Nova Scotia and Offshore. Nova Scotia citations represent documents whose contents are very general and provincial in their geographic coverage. Citations that appear under Offshore represent documents whose contents describe work conducted off mainland Nova Scotia in the offshore regions. The author index is an alphabetic index of all the personal authors, corporate authors, exploration licensees, exploration companies, agencies and institutions who are responsible for generating or sponsoring all the documents cited. The keels of drifting icebergs or sea or lake ice pressure ridges which plough through seafloor or lacustrine sediments generate characteristic curvilinear furrows referred to as iceberg scours. While much is known about the surface morphology of scours, little is known on the nature and extent of sediment deformation beneath iceberg scours. This paper describes in detail the cross-sectional morphology and subscour deformation structures associated with relict iceberg scours subaerially exposed on the floor of glacial Lake Agassiz in southern Manitoba. A bulldozer and backhoe were used to expose cross-sections of the scours to maximum excavated depths of 9 m. Block samples were taken from the sediments below scours A and B for the analysis of microstructures.

Occupational pension plans : selected policy issues

by J. Dewetering. Library of Parliament, Research Branch, 1991. 25, 31 p. Bibliogr. (Background paper ; BP-250E) Bilingual (Régimes de retraite professionnels...). ISBN 0-660-14100-0

Statistics Canada data indicate that, at the beginning of 1988, the approximately 4.8 million Canadian workers participating in occupational pension plans represented 44.9 percent of all employed paid workers. This paper examines selected aspects of occupational pension plans, focusing on the jurisdictional and legal framework, the coverage of the labour force in terms of employees who may participate and various eligibility conditions, types of plans, and the vesting locking-in and portability of pension credits. It also discusses inflation protection and the related issue of pension surpluses, as well as survivor benefits.

Occupational radiation exposure and mortality study, I : international linkage of the Canadian National Dose Registry

by E. Coppock, D. Dobson and M. Fair. Ottawa : Atomic Energy Control Board, 1992. x, 55 p. Bibliogr. (Research report ; INFO-0417-1)
MICROLOG 92-05774 1 fiche

An epidemiological cohort study of some 300,000 Canadians enrolled in the National Dose Registry was begun in 1984 to determine if there is excess cancer or other causes of mortality among those workers who are occupationally exposed to low levels of ionizing radiation. The study compared the mortality of the cohort of workers monitored for ionizing radiation with that of the overall population of Canada and determined whether or not there is a difference in cause of death between exposed and non-exposed members of the cohort; if death from specific diseases occurs more frequently in the exposed members of the cohort than in the non-exposed members; if a dose response relationship can be established between the level of exposure and the mortality of the cohort; and if there is an upper limit on the residual level of risk associated with radiation exposure if no dose response relationship can be established. This report gives details of the work carried out at Statistics Canada in assembling the study cohort.

Occupational safety and health concerns of Canadian women : a background paper

by K. Messing. Ottawa : Labour Canada, Women's Bureau, 1991. 96 p. Bibliogr.
MICROLOG 92-04291 2 fiche

This background paper examines the possible health and safety issues associated with those occupations with a large number of women, so-called traditional female jobs, and also examines selected health and safety concerns associated with non-traditional, blue-collar jobs. Some concerns of aboriginal women, immigrant and visible minority women, and women with disabilities, are highlighted. The discussion, unless otherwise specified, is restricted to paid work. The paper first presents an overview of women's occupational health and safety (OSH) issues to explain why it is necessary to examine women's occupational health specifically, related to the issues of safety in areas where the tasks and equipment are designed with average-sized men in mind. The second section is a general introduction to the occupational health field, explaining some of the methodological challenges involved in identifying occupational health risks for women and the interactions of the workplace with age, heredity, lifestyle, and socio-economic status. Specific health effects for specific traditional jobs are detailed.

Ocean-clutter model for high-frequency radar

by R.H. Khan. St. John's : Memorial University of Newfoundland, Centre for Cold Ocean Resources Engineering, 1991. 8 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (C-CORE publication ; no. 91-3) In IEEE Journal of Oceanic Engineering : vol. 16, no. 2, April 1991.
MICROLOG 92-01898 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

The inverse problem of extracting the ocean wave-length spectrum from the high-frequency (HF) radar clutter signal involves inventing a nonlinear integral equation. The strong ocean-clutter signal also eliminates the application of HF radar to target detection. This paper describes a detailed investigation of the time-varying behaviour of the ocean clutter and shows that the ocean-clutter can be modeled by two narrowband signals, with time-varying frequencies, centred around the two Bragg frequencies. It is demonstrated that the spectrum of such an angle-modulated signal agrees closely with the spectrum of HF radar data and accounts for the characteristics corresponding to both the first- and second-order scattering peaks.

One in a series of cruises to determine the abundance, distribution, and types of larval and juvenile short-finned squid in the frontal zone between Gulf Stream water and slope water from Chesapeake Bay to Florida and to determine the role oceanographic processes, including the Gulf Stream, play in the squid distribution and transport. This report presents biological and physical oceanographic data collected during R/V Alfred H. Needler cruise no. 56 off south Florida from 8-28 January 1986. Measurements of abundance, distribution and biological characteristics were taken along with temperature, salinity, sigma-theta, nutrients, and chlorophyll-a.

The Northern Oil and Gas Action Program has as one of its sub-projects a major interdisciplinary study of the oceanography of the Canadian Beaufort Sea, particularly the transport and fate of materials (especially hydrocarbons) over the Beaufort Shelf, and the primary productivity of these coastal waters. Field work began in 1986 and is on-going. This report gives the results of a September 1991 cruise, detailing bottle data for measurements of salinity, temperature, nutrients (silicate, phosphate and nitrate), dissolved oxygen, and chlorophyll a determinations, and the CTD data.

This paper describes the translator's workstation, on a PC/AT, which was developed by CWARC for the Canadian government's Translation Bureau. A description is made of the many software packages included in the system, especially of the DESQview integrator and of the Mercury/Termex terminological DBMS. After having pointed out the weak points of such an environment, the author discusses CWARC's plans for a more advanced workstation that will incorporate specialized machine translation modules as well as certain vocal functions.

A tiled terrace at a maximum elevation of 141 m on the eastern wall of the Du Gouffre River valley, near Baie-St-Paul, Quebec, was investigated to determine the orientation of the layered units within the terrace on each side of a lineament which cuts through it. The work completed in the summer and fall of 1990 involved surveying (levelling), trenching, a ground-probing radar survey, the analysis of the material shown along the wall of the excavations, and the correlation of the units on each segment of the terrace.

On improving the accuracy of line extraction in Hough space

This paper presents the Hierarchical Peak Compaction Hough Transform (HPCHT) for line extraction. Vote scattering in the parameter space is a problem when using the Hough Transform for line extraction. This paper investigates the effects of image size and edge data errors on the severity of vote scattering. The HPCHT uses a hierarchical approach based on the image pyramid. It adapts the error scale at each level and calculates the best achievable accuracy for line estimation. The algorithm can be extended to detection of arbitrary patterns and is suited for fast parallel implementations on pyramid computers. BC PR PS SC

The Generalized Hough Transform (GHIT) proposed by Ballard is an effective method for recognizing objects of arbitrary shape. It converts a problem of global pattern matching into local peak searching but has difficulty handling occluded objects and suffers from the congestion at the single peak point when attempting its potential parallelization. This paper presents a Linear Generalized Hough Transform (LGHIT) in which a linear numeric pattern is used to replace the single peak in the GHIT. Several sequential and parallel LGHIT algorithms and the preliminary results are presented. BC PR PS SC

On the complexity of colouring by superdigraphs of bipartite graphs

It follows from the result of Hell and Nesetril that H-COL is NP-complete whenever H contains the equivalent digraph of a non-bipartite undirected graph. Thus in order to complete the classification of all directed graphs, it remains to consider those digraphs for which the 'undirected part' is bipartite; that is, directed graphs obtained from the equivalent digraph of an undirected bipartite graph by adding some arcs. The paper begins by proving some general results, then introduces the family of 'partitionable' digraphs, and proves that if H is a partitionable digraph, then H-COL is NP-complete if H does not admit a homomorphism to the directed two-cycle C<sub>2</sub>, and is polynomial otherwise. This verifies the conjecture for partitionable digraphs.

Electronic warfare systems rely more and more on the development of digital processing to increase their signal handling capability. This research investigated new means of computing the discrete Fourier transform (DFT) at very high speed using VLSI circuits. This report presents a DFT architecture aimed at applications where DFTs must be computed at very high speeds, and where the number of points is fixed and not large, typically a few hundred or less. This architecture uses the Winograd Fourier transform algorithm (WFTA). In the proposed architecture, an N-point WFTA is mapped directly onto a VLSI circuit using an addressless, bit-serial scheme.

On the structure of the matrix Riccati equation and the associated LQR

by M. Saif. Burnaby, B.C. : Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science, 1989. 26 p.
MICROLOG 92-05407 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

This paper addresses the problem of selecting weighting matrices for an optimal linear quadratic regulator (LQR) such that the closed loop eigenspectrum are assigned to desired locations. The approach presented is a recursive one where at each stage of the recursive procedure the dynamic system is aggregated to a second or first order system depending on whether a complex conjugate pair or a real pole is being placed. The approach is capable of assigning all or a subset of the poles without altering the remaining open loop poles. In addition, the optimal controller is capable of placing a complex conjugate pair at a new complex conjugate location, or at two distinct real locations. The algorithm is computationally attractive since low order matrix calculations are required throughout.

To gain a better understanding of preaeration and gold cyanidation, a small bench scale reactor was devised and experiments were carried out to determine the conditions for optimum gas/liquid mass transfer rates in the reactor. The effect of gas flow rate, liquid pumping rate, and solids content of the slurry on the mass transfer coefficient were evaluated. Silica sand, ground to a size fraction similar to that of a gold ore used in subsequent preaeration tests was used. A central composite experimental design was implemented to account for any curvature in the response. The data of the experimental design were used to determine an optimum set of operating conditions for the use of the reactor as a gold ore preaerator where both air and oxygen were used.

Ce document présente le neuvième rapport annuel du Bureau du commissaire aux plaintes du public. Le commissaire a pour fonction principale de contrôler l'enquête de la police, et non de mener l'enquête préliminaire. Il est en mesure d'effectuer un contrôle, car il reçoit une copie de toutes les plaintes, dès leur dépôt, de même qu'une copie de tous les rapports d'enquêtes mensuels, dès qu'ils sont terminés. Ce document se penche sur les points suivants: survol du système de plainte et expansion du système; recherche et statistique; autres activités importantes; et recommandations à la commission de police de la communauté urbaine de Toronto.

The Commission oversees bargaining procedures for over 270 collective agreements which fall under its jurisdiction. The annual report reviews negotiation activity during the year. Staff activities reviewed include negotiation monitoring, selection and training of third parties, quasi-judicial matters (complaints), preventative mediation and information services. The negotiation process is described along with a history of teacher-school board bargaining. Statistical appendices describe negotiations and agreements reached and also include biographical information on Commissioners.

The Ontario Waste Composition Study was conducted to develop and test methodologies that would assist waste management planners and municipalities in deriving reasonable estimates of the material composition and generation rate of wastes from residential and commercial sources. This report presents the results from the commercial sector, and describes the development and field trial of a methodology for estimating the type and quantity of waste generated by a variety of different types of commercial enterprises. The study focused on the commercial activities that are most closely linked to residential requirements. The plan of the study was developed in the winter of 1989/90 using the information on the amount and composition of commercial employment provided by Statistics Canada and local government agencies to define a sampling framework for the field work. Commercial activity is organized by standard industrial classification. Results are given by commercial groups and per employee.

MICROLOG 92-00004 1 fiche

In January 1990, a project was begun to investigate potential opportunities for biotechnology in specialty field crops (vegetable brassicas, mustard seed, soybeans, winter wheat) in Canada. The project assembled data on acreage, production, and value by region for the past five years for each of the crops and determined the current use of each crop, the major problems and opportunities in production, marketing, and use, the value of improvements for each crop, and the availability of Canadian expertise to develop and market products with improved characteristics. Canadian expertise was determined only for winter wheat, as the economic benefits of pursuing biotechnology in the other 3 crop areas were considered too small to justify investigation. Data was used from Statistics Canada, provincial departments of agriculture, the Canadian Wheat Board, and the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture. A series of in-depth interviews were conducted with industry, government, and university people across Canada and a few in the U.S.

The simplex method is used iteratively to obtain sharp lower bounds by solving successive relaxations of this model. Optimality is achieved by using Gomory cuts, blossom inequalities, and balanced set constraints. Elaborate computer results are presented.

Optimization of oil recovery from New Brunswick oil shale

by J.W. Black. Ottawa : Energy, Mines and Resources Canada, Canada Centre for Mineral and Energy Technology, 1992. ix, 46 p. : ill. Bibliogr. Contractor: BBC Engineering. CANMET contract: 23440-09049-01-SQ
MICROLOG 92-06767 1 fiche

Fast reactors (under one second residence time) tend to produce higher yields of oil from oil shale than do conventional slow reactors (one minute to four hours). These greater oil yields result from reduced coking within the shale particles and less cracking of the oil in the gas phase. An additional benefit of the fast reactors is smaller vessel size and thus capital cost savings. To confirm these assumptions, a preliminary series of tests was carried out in an ablative fast pyrolysis reactor with New Brunswick oil shale, with a temperature of 450C-650C, a residence time of 400-1100 milliseconds, a particle size of 375-850 microns, and nitrogen and hydrogen as carrier gases. The Fischer Assay test was used to establish the oil yield that could likely be obtained from a conventional retort, not necessarily the maximum oil yield obtainable from the shale.

Optimization of organic contaminant and toxicity testing analytical procedures for estimating the characteristic and environmental significance of natural gas processing plant waste sludges

prepared for the Canadian Petroleum Association and Environment Canada ; by Nina Novak. Calgary, Alta. : The Association, 1990. xxxi, 217 p. : ill. Bibliogr.
MICROLOG 92-00396 3 fiche

Results from Phase IIB of a program to characterize sludges generated as gas processing plants. The Phase IIB program developed an effective procedure for screening waste sludges or centrifugate/leachate generated from sludge samples for volatile, solvent-soluble and water-soluble organics; verified the reproducibility of the three aquatic toxicity tests recommended as the battery of tests for determining the environmental significance of sludge centrifugates or leachates; assessed the performance of two terrestrial toxicity tests in determining the environmental significance of whole sludge samples applied to soil; and assessed and discussed the reproducibility and cost-effectiveness of the sampling and analytical techniques proposed for the overall sludge characterization procedure (excluding inorganic analytical techniques).

Options for integrated resource management in the Mackenzie Delta-Beaufort Sea region

by J.E. Green. Calgary, Alta. : Canadian Petroleum Association, 1991. vii, 39 p. Bibliogr.
MICROLOG 92-02794 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

Following the completion in May 1990 of a draft land use plan for the Mackenzie Delta-Beaufort Sea region, the Canadian Petroleum Association expressed a number of concerns related to the emphasis on land protection and preservation rather than integrated and multiple use; the focus of the plan on management of renewable resources in contrast to only limited discussion on non-renewable resources; the need to address the potential effects of hydrocarbon development on renewable resources using both traditional and scientific knowledge; the assessment of the petroleum industry's spill response status, the assessment of current ocean dumping practices and regulations; and the need to define how absolute and seasonal protection plans for protected areas will be developed and how potential land use conflicts will be resolved. This review summarizes examples of consultative activities and environmental protection measures that have been employed in the planning region by one or more petroleum operators to successfully achieve integrated land use during the past two decades.

This report presents information on significant deposits of limestone and dolomite occurring in Ordovician and Silurian rocks throughout N.B., including data on access, topographic and geological settings (stratigraphy and structure), and a summary of related exploration or development undertaken on specific deposits. Preliminary observations on grades, tonnages, and quarry opportunities are presented for most deposits. Field investigations, completed during the summer of 1984, included extensive sampling and mapping of several major Ordovician and Silurian limestone belts and outcrop areas in Carleton, Gloucester, Madawaska, Restigouche, Victoria, and York counties. One small deposit situated on the Bay of Fundy coast in Charlotte County was also examined.

Deposits within and directly linked to intrusive rocks (magmatic, porphyries, skarns), replacement deposits, possible mantle deposits, deep to shallow veins and related deposits formed at the surface, volcanogenic massive sulphides and sedex deposits are then discussed. Sedimentary-hosted deposits of gypsum, barite, phosphate and other industrial minerals are not covered, nor are coal, uranium, pegmatite-hosted deposits, molybdenum porphyries or some of the less common deposit types such as carbonatites, tin greisens, and placers.

While many studies indicate that seniors prefer to remain in their own homes and neighbourhoods, many also find the maintenance of these homes the main reason they must move into institutional forms of housing. This study developed a manual of maintenance strategies that seniors could pursue as a means to continued, independent well-being in their own homes. The study identified those elements of outdoor maintenance work for single family residences which are particularly onerous; identified and evaluated exterior building materials, appropriate landscape designs, and maintenance strategies that are both cost effective and easy to maintain; and prepared a consumer-oriented illustrated report on the findings. Research included an extensive literature review, and interviews with senior homeowners, a landscape contractor, a nurseryman, a home maintenance consultant, senior citizen agencies, and knowledgeable individuals.

The Ovarian histology of English sole Parophrys vetulus

MICROLOG 92-04911 1 fiche

English sole is an important component of the bottom-trawl fishery in Hecate Strait, B.C., although its abundance has fluctuated widely over the past 40 years, largely due to interannual variation in recruitment. To investigate mechanisms for forecasting recruitment and estimating sustainable yield for stock assessment, detailed information concerning oocyte maturation was needed. This paper presents information concerning the microscopic ovarian histology of English sole using ovaries from mature English sole collected from 1986-90. Sections were prepared for microscopic examination and results of the examination were related to macroscopic maturity stages previously described for Pacific coast flatfish species.

When Canada extended jurisdiction over fisheries in 1977 and created a 200-mile exclusive fishing zone (EFZ), the northeastern and southeastern sections and the outcropping of the continental shelf east of the Grand Bank, remained largely beyond Canadian control. Five species of groundfish cross outside the EFZ during their seasonal migrations. Overfishing of these species by foreign-based fleets undermine Canadian efforts at conservation, and are a major factor in the current decline of the Atlantic fishery. This review covers the establishment in 1949 of the International Commission for the Northeast Atlantic Fisheries and its 1979 successor, the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization (NAFO); the relations among NAFO members, particularly after the entry of Spain and Portugal to the European Economic Community, the United Nations Convention on the Law of the Sea; and parliamentary actions taken. packaging in use in 2000 are estimated. Data used is from Statistics Canada time-series data on the expenditures of industry on packaging from 1979-86. However, the trade of packaging as packaging-in-use is not recorded, therefore the StatsCan database is not conclusive. In addition, some data was not reported on the grounds of confidentiality, and the classification has changed a number of times during the relevant period. The report identifies the value of packaging as a proportion of the value of the product; patterns of overall expenditures on packaging and packaging types by industry sectors; the range of packaging used by each industry sector, and the major industrial purchasers of each type of packaging. • CA CO EV

Informs students' parents or guardians of the identification, placement, and review (IPR) process for the school board's Special Education Program. Each statement pertaining to the IPR process is presented in question and answer form. Statements are divided under the following ten headings: definitions, IPR process, Committee meeting, discussion meeting, appeal board, the school board's decision following appeal, special education tribunal, review, additional information, and a flow chart for the IPR process. An IPR committee determines if a referred student is exceptional, identifies his placement needs, and reviews the placement's suitability. The Committee's review of the educational assessment consists of all documentation related to the pupil's educational achievements. The parent is directly involved in the placement of the child. Copies of the 'Parent/Guardian Guide' are available in each of the schools, at the school board office, and at the Regional Office of the Ministry of Education.

At Naden Harbour on the Queen Charlotte Islands, B.C., partial cutting and yarding with a Sikorsky S 64-E Sky-Crane helicopter was used to remove old-growth Sitka spruce, western hemlock, and western redcedar from environmentally sensitive floodplain sites. A retrospective study of the development of these partial cutting operations was conducted. Four case studies describe the type of floodplain sites on which partial cutting was used. Various forestry concerns about partial cutting are reviewed, including the silvicultural implications, the damage to residual trees, blowdown following cutting, and the protection of important fish habitats. The procedures used to select appropriate sites, mark individual trees, and conduct falling, yarding, and post-logging clean-up are described.

by S.-D. Chang. Toronto : Ontario Hydro, Research Division, 1991. iii, 23 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Report ; no. 91-166-K)
MICROLOG 92-04123 1 fiche

In a gas side resistance limited mass transfer system, the concentration difference between the gas phase and the equilibrium interface is the driving force for the mass transfer from gas to liquid. The partial pressure of SO2 in sodium bisulfite-sulfite salt solution was investigated by the U.S. EPA in which experimental data covers the pH range from 4-6 and the ionic strength up to 10. The investigation found that the correlation can predict the equilibrium SO2 partial pressure fairly well for conditions of pH below six but cannot predict the partial pressure accurately for conditions of pH greater than six where sulfite ions are present in significant quantity. This report describes a method based on a real solution consisting of SO2 and active species (sodium sulfite and sodium bisulfite) and inactive species, (sodium sulfate) and sodium chloride in chemical equilibrium, closely simulating the FMC dual alkali system.

Over the past two decades, various particle-size analyzers came on the market, with each using a different principle to measure particle size and each claiming to provide the most accurate size distribution. This report presents an evaluation of a Micromeritics Sedigraph (Model 5000ET), a Leeds and Northrup Microtrac (Model 7991), a Brinkmann Particle Size Analyzer and Image Analyzer (Model 2010), and a set of micro screens. Each apparatus was used to analyze samples of glass beads, sphalerite, hematite, and a calcite sample classified into fines, middlings, and coarse fractions. Certified standards (three sizes of polystyrene balls) were acquired but were unsuitable for measurement by the Microtrac or Sedigraph due to the manner in which they were presented. Each piece of equipment was evaluated for reproducibility of replicate analyses and repeated analyses of fresh aliquots of the same material. Comparisons were made among all methods.

Human-like running is a natural dynamic mode of a simple mechanical biped. Such a machine consists of two telescoping legs with linear springs, connected by a hip joint with a torsional spring. It will run passively, and with careful design its energy consumption can approach zero. This paper presents an analytical model that runs passively and uses it to explain some features of human running to suggest techniques for design and control of running machines.

An analysis of passive walking is developed for a two-dimensional biped with no lateral motion. The analysis includes solution for the steady gait and for the step-to-step stability of that gait. The theory is then used to study parameter variations and to review parameter selection for the test machine. The paper then discusses the initial experiments and ends with some comments on developments to come, including passive foot clearance, steering, gait variation, and addition of power.

Le but de ce document est de dresser le bilan de la pauvreté au Québec et de voir comment il a évolué ces dernières années. De plus, l'étude présente un aspect original puisque, pour la première fois au Québec, elle utilise des indicateurs permettant de mesurer la gravité de la pauvreté. Les sujets traités dans le document sont: les approches et mesures concernant la pauvreté; la situation changeante de la pauvreté, le taux et la répartition de la pauvreté en relation avec le marché du travail; la gravité de la pauvreté; les revenus des ménages pauvres et des autres; et, le Québec dans le contexte canadien.

MICROLOG 92-00139 1 fiche

The fundamental principal of pay equity is equal pay for work of equal value, and is based on the premise that certain jobs which traditionally have been performed by women are undervalued and paid less simply because they are considered to be 'women's jobs'. This report summarizes the activities of the joint Pay Equity Steering Committee, since its first meeting in September 1989.

Provincial water quality objectives were established to protect ambient water quality conditions in Ontario rivers. In addition, there are several guidelines and regulations which allow the introduction of pollution control measures but uncertainties are embedded in the system due to the variabilities of streamflow and of diffuse-source pollution. This paper evaluates performances using probability concepts of reliability, resiliency and vulnerability. The performances of several rivers are judged by the capability of the rivers to maintain water quality conditions, to meet the requirements of provincial water quality objectives, their ability to recover from failure and the significance of the consequence of failure.

MICROLOG 92-05563 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

Transparent tone-in-band (TTIB) creates a spectral gap by splitting a signal into frequency bands which are then separated by modulation. The receiver recombines the bands by demodulation, a process which must be coherent in the case of data transmission. Phase locked transparent tone-in-band (PLTTIB), in its original form, contained an unacceptably high level of self-noise in the coherent band recombination process. Recently, a symmetric form of the PLTTIB phase detector was demonstrated to eliminate self-noise, though no analysis of its locking behaviour was available. This paper provides the first performance analysis of PLTTIB with symmetric phase detection, and contains a number of results of importance to the designer, including the effect of recombination phase error on BER, the mean square phase error, the pdf of phase error, and the pull-in time of the phase tracker. Although the detailed results are obtained only for static channels, a qualitative assessment of the effect of fading is given.

A few years ago, most particulate fuel burners in the small-commercial range (50-300 kW) were European. While Scandinavian woodchip-fired appliances were found to burn waste wood much more cleanly than conventional roundwood burning appliances, they were manufactured to European specifications and were quite expensive. A PEI dealer in Scandinavian appliances and an Ontario manufacturer cooperated to develop a Canadian pre-heater, the Bioblast. Several Ontario dealers expressed interest in the Bioblast but no technical data were available. This paper reports on a modified version of the unit called Bioblast-2, which was tested to obtain emission, output and efficiency data, to determine acceptable fuel types and moisture contents, to assess the overall electrical and mechanical reliability of the pre-heater and recommend design improvements, and to assist the manufacturer in the preparation of a reliable data sheet for the appliance. The report describes the appliance, gives the methodology of the study, and discusses test results.

Persévérance scolaire et transition dans les écoles secondaires de l'Ontario : politiques, pratiques et perspectives d'avenir

Cette étude vise à déterminer comment les écoles secondaires de l'Ontario, peuvent favoriser la persévérance scolaire et réduire le taux des abandons scolaires. Cette question est abordée de 4 façons: sous l'angle sociologique, qui considère l'école secondaire dans ses rapports avec le milieu, du point de vue des caractéristiques organisationnelles, associées aux écoles plus efficaces; dans une optique ethnographique, selon le point de vue des décrocheurs eux-mêmes; enfin, en fonction de la transition de l'école au marché du travail, envisagée comme rite de passage. On a eu recours à 3 méthodes de recherche: revue de la documentation spécialisée, enquête à l'aide d'un questionnaire, et étude de cas. La revue de la documentation spécialisée a fait l'objet de projets de recherche, visant à déterminer les variables dépendantes et indépendantes, la taille des échantillons, les méthodologies et les conclusions des spécialistes. Elle a fourni le cadre de travail, nécessaire à la réalisation de l'enquête et à l'élaboration de guides d'interview pour les études de cas.

Cette revue économique examine la situation en Ontario pour 1990-91 et les perspectives qui serviront à l'élaboration du budget de 1992. Le document présente une vue d'ensemble sur l'emploi, les salaires et les compétences sur le marché du travail. On passe en revue quelques-uns des changements importants qui sont survenus sur le marché de l'emploi en Ontario depuis le début des années 1980. Un exposé des perspectives d'emploi à court et moyen terme conclut cette section. Ensuite, on traite des perspectives dans 10 secteurs importants, et on passe en revue les résultats de chacun pendant les années 1980. On étudie aussi les facteurs qui auront une influence sur les perspectives sectorielles jusqu'en 1995. Le 4e chapitre présente les prévisions macro-économiques pour les quatre prochaines années. Il expose les hypothèses sur lesquelles s'appuient ces prévisions ainsi qu'une évaluation des risques s'y rattachant. En annexes, on trouve des données sur des principales variables économiques pendant des années 1980. CO ON PA PR ST

Phase centre determination of MLS antenna systems, phase I

by H. Moheb...et al. Montreal : Transport Canada, Policy and Coordination Group, Transportation Development Centre, 1990. xxiii, 269 p. : ill. Bibliogr.
MICROLOG 92-01927 4 fiche

Summary of efforts made to develop a mathematical model to determine the uniqueness of the phase centre for the azimuth antenna of microwave landing systems (MLS). For an ideal antenna, the phase centre is located at its geometrical centre. However, any deviation from the ideal results in the movement of the phase centre from geometrical centre and causes its non-uniqueness. Under various design and operational conditions, therefore, the MLS antenna has an apparent phase centre that generally moves with its beam scan. This report provides a mathematical model for locating the phase centre of any given antenna or arrays and then utilizes it for investigating the effect of different antenna parameters on its uniqueness. The model is then extended to investigate the effects of secondary parameters such as ground reflection and thermal expansion and/or contraction on the phase centre movement.

The population of beluga whales inhabiting the St. Lawrence estuary is considered to be endangered and have been fully protected since 1979. The Interdepartmental Action Plan for the Survival of the Beluga of the St. Lawrence includes a research component designed to augment knowledge of the population in such a way as may be appropriate to direct management and protective measures. The research undertaken has included aerial surveys to study the size, distribution and movements of the population. This report presents the results of two census surveys of the population, carried out by photographic aerial survey, one at the end of August 1988 and the other in mid-September 1990.

The Physical and economic dimensions of municipal solid waste management in Ontario

Toronto : Environment Ontario, Fiscal Planning and Economic Analysis Branch, 1991. xi, 230 p. : ill. Bibliogr. ISBN 0-7729-8952-4 MICROLOG 92-03409 3 fiche

This study compiled information on the physical and economic dimensions of municipal solid waste management in Ontario, divided into the major components of waste generation, waste recycling, and waste disposal. Waste generation was divided into residential and industrial-commercial-institutional (ICI) components. Residential waste generation was estimated by combining information from a number of sources, including the recently completed study by Gore and Storrie. ICI waste generation rate information was obtained from a number of waste audits carried out in the province, then divided into 25 categories. Waste generation rates (kg-employee-day) and waste composition data (percent wood, paper, etc.) were developed for each ICI category, then combined with confidential county-specific employment data to estimate the quantity and type of waste produced by each major ICI category in each county.

Physical education curriculum guide, junior division, grades 4-5-6

North York, Ont. : Board of Education for the City of North York, 1989. ii, 304 p. : ill. Bibliogr. ONTERIS: CD09519. Not available from Micromedia Ltd.

Divided into 7 parts, the opening section offers general information about junior children (ages 9-11) and physical education. Sections 2-5 offer activities for rhythmic (creative dance, folk dance), educational gymnastics, games, and integration (through movement education; ideas for activities - classroom, hallways; suggestions for challenge cards). Each section features an introduction that cites general goals and objectives. All activities are accompanied by instructions and, if needed, an equipment list. Sections 6 and 7 provide, respectively, a glossary of terms and a list of reference materials (books, films, records).

Opening pages consist of course objectives, suggestions for programming and evaluation, and sample lesson plan blanks. Actual course material is grouped into successive lesson plans. Each plan focuses on a specific activity. Plans are subdivided into objective, introductory activity, equipment, skill development, teacher observation, and skill application. Activities include various games, dance, parachute, and gym scooter activities. A unit on outdoor education follows. It includes playground games, outdoor activities, and fitness activities. Grouped under resources are alternate programs for the physically challenged, ways to foster fair play, and cultural activities. An equipment list completes this document.

The Physical processes of seabed disturbance during iceberg grounding and scouring

This paper describes and interprets observations of the iceberg scouring process made during the dynamics of iceberg grounding and scouring (DIGS) experiment carried out on the Labrador continental shelf in 1985. DIGS was a multidisciplinary study designed to make detailed observations and measurements of the iceberg grounding and scouring phenomenon ranging from the dynamic behaviour of free-floating and seabed-touching icebergs to descriptions and measurements of iceberg-deformed seabed sediment. Five new iceberg scours were documented during the DIGS experiment and this report describes and interprets the common elements of the five in order to gain a better understanding of the processes and mechanisms occurring at the keel-seabed interface. Elements unique to a site are also described. Both common and unique elements are used to create a geological model of the scouring process that can be compared to ancient iceberg furrows.

Part II of a two-part project to provide a description of the physical, chemical, and biological effects of the Churchill River diversion and Lake Winnipeg regulation on the aquatic environment. Specific geographical reference is made to the communities of Norway House, Nelson House, Cross Lake, Split Lake, and York Landing, all signatories to the Northern Flood Agreement. Phase I of the study provided an initial compilation and synthesis of available information on water levels and flows, lake and river shorelines, erosion, sediment transport, deposition, debris, ice, water chemistry, fisheries, and mercury. The Phase

I report was to be combined with information from an Adaptive Environmental Management Workshop intended to include all interested parties. Due to the refusal of the Northern Flood Committee to attend the workshop or to provide community representation, it was cancelled. This report is limited to information collected during the Phase I study, additional information is provided by individuals and organizations active in the study area, and information published since release of the Phase I document.

Very little is known about the oceanographic factors affecting the early marine growth and survival of salmon, although their importance in the productivity of salmon is suggested by the large fluctuations shown by many B.C. salmon stocks. In April 1987, an initial survey cruise of Barkley Sound and Alberni Inlet was undertaken to determine the magnitude and spatial variability of plankton productivity and abundance in the region immediately prior to the spring smolt migration. Concurrently, other researchers tracked the migration of juvenile sockeye through the system and conducted aerial mapping of surface chlorophyll and temperature to determine whether areas of high plankton productivity and abundance are present and correlated with the distribution of migrating schools of sockeye. This report presents primary production, phytoplankton biomass, and nutrient and particulate chemistry data in the area in late April. Depth profiles of in vivo chlorophyll fluorescence were also collected throughout the area along with CTD transects for physical oceanographic data.

This manual replaces the algal identification and enumeration course manual last printed in 1970. It was modified to include taxonomic revisions and quantitative methodologies which have been adopted during the intervening years. It includes changes to sample preservation, sample preparation, and concentration techniques. Alternatives to quantification of algal biomass including biovolume measurements and some statistical measurements to assess counting accuracies were added. The manual includes methods for identifying and enumerating plankton; animal life encountered in water supplies; characteristics of major types of algae, such as blue-green algae, non-motile green algae, and flagellated algae; identification of diatoms; water supply sampling investigation; concentration techniques for algae enumeration; use of the microscope with algae and plankton; and calibration of plankton counting equipment.

On 19 August 1991, a phytotoxicology survey was conducted in the vicinity of the new production facility of Brampton Brick near Snelgrove, Ontario. The new facility opened in 1988 but did not become fully operational until 1989. A pre-operational study was conducted in 1987, followed by post-operational (fluoride) surveys in 1989 and 1990. The August 1991 survey used foliage collected from the exposed side of the seven maple tree sites established in 1990. Forage collection was discontinued at the six forage sites sampled in previous years. From each maple site, duplicate samples of foliage were collected using standard sampling procedures. In addition to foliage sampling, maple trees and other vegetation growing in the survey area were inspected for foliar fluoride injury.

A survey was conducted on August 15, 1990 in the vicinity of Canada Brick, Burlington, Ontario, to determine the effects of fluoride emissions on surrounding vegetation. The survey was requested because previous surveys in 1986, 1987, and 1989 had shown that fluoride emissions from the company had increased since the expansion of the brick production facilities in late 1986 through mid-1987. Tree foliage for fluoride analysis was collected from exposed middle branches at sites close to the plant as well as at more remote sites. Foliage of trees and other vegetation known to be sensitive to fluoride in the vicinity of the collection sites was inspected for fluoride injury.

Nearby residents and other concerned citizens expressed opposition to the expansion because of the decline and death of a line of trees along the edge of a small woodlot adjacent to the east side of the site. A phytotoxicology investigation was undertaken on 10 September 1991, including a visual examination of the trees and three sites in the area, collecting of tree cores from one site, and the examination of vegetation in the vicinity of the affected trees. Adjacent sites were also examined to determine recent drainage pattern changes. This report provides the results of the examinations.

At the time of the survey, Exolon manufactured silicon carbide and aluminum oxide. The emissions of primary concern were sulphur compounds (H<sub>2</sub>S, SO<sub>x</sub>) and particulate. Foliar inspections for SO<sub>x</sub>-type injuries were conducted on trees, shrubs, flowers, and garden crops on residential properties along Queen St. to the immediate east, and along Bolton Ave. to the north of Exolon. In addition, Manitoba and/or silver maple foliage was collected for chemical analysis from exposed branches at eight stations close to Exolon and five more remote sites. CAMCO is a large manufacturer of home appliances in Hamilton, Ontario. Appliances that require a porcelain finish are sprayed with an enamel which may contain fluoride, boron, and a number of other elements and excess spray materials from the process are exhausted into the atmosphere in gaseous and particulate form. Annual surveys of the vegetation and/or soils in the vicinity of the plant have been conducted since 1983. In 1987, components containing boron were eliminated from the production process, although vegetation will continue to absorb boron from the soil for several years. To monitor the residual effects of boron contaminated soil on vegetation in the vicinity of the plant, the annual surveillance was continued in 1990, the first since boron was eliminated from plant production processes. Vegetation was examined and sampled at 13 established sites around the plant. At each site, foliage was examined and visible injury was evaluated and recorded. A duplicate sample of examined foliage was also collected from the portion of the tree crown facing the plant for chemical analysis from each survey site. Analyses were conducted for boron, fluoride, titanium, barium, and sodium.

Vegetation assessment surveys have been conducted since the early 1970s in the vicinity of the Canadian Industries Ltd. (CIL) Lambton Works superphosphate operation because of substantial emissions of hydrogen fluoride (HF) from the manufacture of superphosphate fertilizer, from the open stack of gypsum wastes, and as a result of evaporation from two settling ponds east of the plant. CIL capped the large stack of gypsum waste material with several feet of clay, eliminating fluoride emissions from this source. In addition, about 350 million of the 500 million gallons of liquid in the settling ponds were treated to remove phosphates and fluorides and a further 100 million gallons are being treated. In 1989, a vegetation assessment survey examined silver maple species at each of 9 sites in the vicinity of the CIL plant. At 10 other sites, grasses only were examined. Morterm Ltd. of Windsor is a port facility on the Detroit River that handles a variety of commodities, one of which is bulk fluorspar (calcium fluoride). It is unloaded and stored in bulk piles which are supposed to be wetted down, as the material consists of very fine particles which can be blown away by light winds. Since 1976, surveys of grasses have been conducted at 10 sites near the property to monitor fluoride concentrations. About 1.5 km south of Morterm is the Canadian Rock Salt Co., which extracts salt from a mine on the property and stores it in large open piles before shipment. In 1985, another site was added to the survey and in 1989, six more sites were added to cover both Morterm and the Canadian Rock Salt Co. In 1989, triplicate samples of grasses were collected for chemical analysis and 0-5 cm soils were collected at 14 of the 17 sites. Waste road construction material, consisting of large quantities of asphalt mixed with other fill material, was used on residential properties on Union St., Cambridge, as fill material in 1988. This material was deposited around foundations and in excavated areas in both the front and back yards and often to considerable depth. Property owners on Union St. persistently complained about health problems and on 24 September 1991 soil sampling was conducted at various properties on the street and analyzed for copper, nickel, lead, zinc, iron, manganese, aluminum, barium, beryllium, cadmium, cobalt, chromium, molybdenum, strontium, titanium, and vanadium. Electrical conductivity and pH was also determined for each sample. This report presents the results of the survey.

On August 6, 1988, a leakage of SO<sub>2</sub> occurred on the property of Casco Inc. at Port Colborne, Ontario. Following the discovery of the leakage, SO<sub>2</sub> was vented to the atmosphere to reduce the pressure in the tank. As a consequence of the action, the nearby vicinity of the Casco operation was subjected to a fumigation of SO<sub>2</sub> and injury to vegetation in the area was reported. This report includes information obtained in investigations conducted in 1989. A sample of injured foliage from a cedar tree growing near the Casco operation was submitted in December 1988 and a surveillance program was set up to determine the extent of damage to vegetation. Two site visits were carried out during 1989 to document the presence of injury and to collect foliage samples for chemical analysis.

Canada Brick is the owner of the former Milton Brickwork property, which has been vacant since at least 1980. The old Milton Brickwork was demolished and Canada Brick is planning to construct a new brickwork on the industrial plant site. In light of this, a pre-operational vegetation (fluoride) assessment survey was conducted in August 1990 after a similar survey in 1981. This report gives the results from the 1981 and 1990 surveys.

Vegetation assessment surveys have been conducted in the vicinity of Canadian Industries Ltd.'s (CIL) Lambton Works since the early 1970s. The manufacture of superphosphate fertilizer and the subsequent storage of production wastes in lagoons east of the plant have resulted in substantial emissions of hydrogen fluoride (HF) to the atmosphere, causing injury to vegetation. The Date Industries facility in Ayr, Ontario, is a scrap iron foundry which melts approximately 20 tons of scrap iron per day. Complaints have been received against the company since 1970 about particulate fallout. The foundry has a 15m cupola stack and two baghouse type dust collector systems in operation. An assessment survey was conducted in August, 1989 using silver maple foliage from trees at eight stations in the vicinity of the smelter, as well as at a reference site in Victoria Park in Ayr. A metal scan and analysis for non-metals was conducted. This report presents the results of the analysis.

On 28 August 1990, there was a release of about 350 kg of tetraethyl lead to the atmosphere at Ethyl Corp., Corunna, that auto-ignited creating a large black cloud. The black cloud was observed, still intact, 4 km to the east-south-east crossing the Petrosar complex shortly after the explosion. Modelling of the plume indicated that significant levels of lead oxide would have existed at the centre of the cloud at 1-2 km from Ethyl Corp. A survey of the vegetation in the downwind direction was conducted on 31 August 1989 to determine if there was any significant lead fallout. The survey collected duplicate silver maple and cottonwood foliage samples at five locations within 4 km of Ethyl Corp. along the projected path of the cloud and analyzed them for lead. Soil surveys were conducted from 1980-82. The company is located on the northeast outskirts of St. Thomas in a partially developed industrial park. An annual moss bag survey was established in 1984 to better delineate the pattern of atmospheric deposition, and patterns of lead and antimony in vegetation and moss bags gradually increased from the beginning of the survey. On 30 May 1990, a 13 station moss bag survey was established in the vicinity of the plant. Foliage was also collected from a number of trees. A survey was conducted on September 19, 1990 around the Riddell Hanna No. 1 oil well to determine the degree and extent of damage that may have been caused to a farm field in the vicinity of the well by pumping out the brine to purge the well. In the past, the brine was pumped directly onto the farm field adjacent to the well. It was estimated that the last purging could have been as long ago as 10 years. A visual examination of the field was conducted and soil samples were taken in duplicate at two sites within the kill area, at two sites in the zone where vegetation was visibly affected, and at one control site. Samples were taken from the 0-5 cm, 10-15

Both surveys showed marginally elevated levels of fluoride at some sites, but the pattern of accumulation and the amount of fluoride did not agree with the model. The assessment survey was repeated in September 1990 to confirm the results of the first two surveys. This report presents the results of the 1990 survey

The Cunningham foundry is a producer of malleable and ductile grey iron castings. The process includes sand moulding, melting, pouring, shakeout, grinding, and machining. Four other foundries and two other industrial operations are located in the immediate area, as well as residential areas. This report provides the results of an assessment survey of the Cunningham foundry on September 15, 1989. Silver maple and Manitoba maple foliage samples were collected in triplicate from nine station locations in the vicinity of the Cunningham foundry as well as from a location 1,150m to the south southeast of the foundry which served as a control. All samples were collected at the same time, using standard sampling techniques. Samples were analyzed for copper, nickel, lead, zinc, iron, manganese, aluminum, arsenic, cadmium, cobalt, chromium, fluoride, molybdenum, sodium, antimony, selenium, strontium, and vanadium. Soil contamination was identified as a specific issue because a children's playground and the backyards of a cooperative housing development directly abut the north side of the ENP building. Soil was collected from seven sites around the ENP building, since there were no process stacks visible. Analyses for polyaromatic hydrocarbons (PAHs) and polychlorinated biphenyls (PABs) were conducted on four of the soil samples Ice scour is a poorly understood phenomena which occurs when ice (pressure ridge or iceberg) moves while in contact with the seabed. It is a feature of most of the coastal regions of northern continents and is of economic significance because of the development of offshore oil and gas resources as well as other subsea installations such as hydroelectric and communications cables. This paper describes the work undertaken to determine the forces and soil displacements that can be expected under a seabed that is being scoured by various ice and seabed interaction processes.

Les précipitations acides, ou les pluies acides comme on les appelle communément, préoccupent de plus en plus bon nombre de Canadiens. Elles proviennent principalement des oxydes de soufre et d'azote dégagés dans l'atmosphère au cours de la combustion de combustibles fossiles et au cours de la fusion de minerais sulfuriques. Ce bulletin d'actualité se penche sur ce sujet et examine particulièrement l'acidité, la formation des pluies acides, les émissions de précurseurs acides en Amérique du Nord, l'aggravation du problème des pluies acides, les effets des pluies acides sur l'environnement, les régions canadiennes exposées aux précipitations acides, et les mesures parlementaires. Conflicts between polar bears and humans occur every year in the Arctic, often resulting in dead bears and less often in dead or injured humans. This concerns management agencies such as Parks Canada and the Dept. of Renewable Resources of the Government of the Northwest Territories. This report reviews the available data on bear-human conflict, develops a descriptive model of that conflict, reviews the potential for conflict on park lands, and recommends methods of minimizing such conflict. Information was obtained from records of the NWT government, annual reports of the Polar Bear Control Program of Manitoba, interviews with polar bear biologists, wildlife officers, and Inuit hunters, unpublished records maintained by Parks Canada for its parks in Manitoba and NWT, goose camps along the coast of Hudson Bay, and reports in published literature.

Edmonton : Alberta Family and Social Services, Office for the Prevention of Family Violence, Women's Shelter Program, 1990. 54 p. : ill. Bibliogr.
MICROLOG 92-04525 1 fiche

This paper examines the nature and scope of police intervention in wife abuse. It tracks the evolving role of police and the criminal justice system in responding to wife assault, examining legislative and policy changes that have occurred in recent years, key research studies which assess the impact of various police intervention strategies on recidivism, and factors which influence police practice. Using data collected from women residents in Alberta's fourteen women's shelters and one second-stage housing program, the paper discusses the type of police intervention experienced by battered women in Alberta and their satisfaction with police response, and offers suggestions for positive change.

Ce guide contient la plupart des renseignements nécessaires à une bonne connaissance des pompes à chaleur sol-eau. La première section donne un aperçu général de certaines idées et conceptions erronées qu'on se fait au sujet des PAC sol-eau. La deuxième section traite des concepts fondamentaux du fonctionnement, de la conception et des applications. La troisième section établit une comparaison entre les PAC sol-eau et quatre autres systèmes de chauffage conventionnels. La quatrième et dernière section fournit des exemples et des illustrations du fonctionnement des PAC sol-eau.

La Population active au Québec : aspects démographiques

par H. Gauthier. Québec : Bureau de la statistique du Québec, Statistiques démographiques, 1991. 140 p. : ill. CSI 67131.233. ISBN 2-551-14456-6
MICROLOG 92-00425 2 fiche

Les aspects démographiques de la population active sont nombreux et leur évolution comporte des incidences socio-économiques importantes, qu'il s'agisse de l'effectif total, de sa répartition par âge et sexe, de ses sources de croissance, de sa composition professionnelle selon l'âge et le sexe. Les données de base de cette étude proviennent des recensements du Canada, des enquêtes sur la population active et de l'enquête sur les finances des consommateurs. L'objectif de l'étude est de présenter d'une façon claire un ensemble de phénomène qui touchent la population active dans ses divers aspects démographiques. Pour ce faire, le document examine l'évolution de la population active de 1951 à 1986; les sources de l'accroissement de la population active; la migration et la population active, la présence d'enfants et l'activité des femmes, la composition professionnelle selon le sexe; et la répartition par âge selon la profession.

Selon le recensement de 1986, la population canadienne d'origine autochtone se compose de près de trois quarts de million de personnes. Plus d'un demi-million de personnes d'origine autochtone vivent maintenant hors réserve. Cependant, bien que les personnes d'origine autochtone vivant hors réserve représentent une minorité importante dans la population totale et sont plus nombreuses que celles vivant sur les réserves, il est surprenant de constater combien peu on en sait à propos de leur situation particulière. Cette étude vise à présenter une vue d'ensemble de la population autochtone du Canada vivant hors réserve, à l'aide de certains indicateurs démographiques, socio-culturels et économiques.

La pornographie, c'est-à-dire toute représentation explicitement sexuelle, a existé sous une forme ou une autre dans pratiquement toutes les sociétés au cours de l'histoire. Certaines personnes estiment que rien ne prouve de façon convaincante qu'il existe un lien de causalité entre la pornographie et la violence physique réelle, et que les autres effets possibles de la pornographie sont trop ténus ou négligeables pour que l'on attente à bon droit à la liberté d'expression garantie dans la Constitution. Ce bulletin tente de donner un aperçu de ce débat.

Aerogels are extremely light (density as low as .02 gr/cu cm), porous materials consisting of inorganic oxides or mixtures of oxides such as silica, alumina, zirconia, stannic or tungsten oxide. Their extremely low thermal conductivity and low thermal loss co-efficients, coupled with the fact that they can be translucent or transparent, give silica aerogels the potential to be ideal superinsulating fillers in window systems. This report summarizes work performed to develop the freeze drying method of aerogel production to the point of demonstrating commercial viability. It provides details of the experimental program, observed results, and a discussion of process improvements and limitations.

Final phase of a 3-phase study carried out for Nanisivik Mines Ltd., located at the north end of Baffin Island and mainly producing zinc ore. Phase I investigated in situ stress determinations and ground control instrumentation to establish rock mass characteristics and to provide relevant input data for computer simulations. Phase II assessed the overall ground stability of mine geometries with various pillar extraction options to develop guidelines for company use in mine planning and ground control; and this Phase III was carried out as a trial in removing pillars and to physically confirm the applicability of the guidelines for post-pillar mining without backfill. This report presents the results of a pillar removal trial carried out in a test slope located in the extreme east end of the main ore zone to verify the results of the stability assessments carried out as part of the Phase 2 study. Five pillars were successfully removed and back analysis and monitoring data were used to validate the model and input parameters used. Field abutment and pillar stresses, determined using CANMET strain rings, were compared with those predicted by numerical model simulation

Uses statistics to show that an increase in the ratio of university graduates to the general population will change labour market advantages enjoyed by the former. The labour market behaviour of teachers is examined. In all major professions, university-qualified members have increased relative to the population. The professions, individually and collectively, are experiencing an erosion of their monopoly positions because university professional association alliances are less effective than they used to be. Universities are responding to other internal and external pressures that result in their accommodating larger portions of certain elements of the population. The relative wages of professionals are also being eroded, it is claimed, as is demonstrated by decreasing mobility and, in some cases, measurable income loss. In the case of teachers, wages remain high, but the queue of would-be teachers grows.

Potential contaminant loadings to the Niagara River from Canadian waste disposal sites

MICROLOG 92-01641 2 fiche

The interpretation of loadings from landfill sites in Ontario must be made with care, as it is difficult to apply one standard methodology to a large number of sites. This report presents the results of an estimation of loadings to the Niagara River from Ontario-based waste disposal sites using a methodology developed for the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency. The report describes the site elimination criteria; the methodology used for calculating contaminant loadings; treatment of the data; and analyses of Atlas Steel landfill in Welland, Cyanamid Inc. landfill in Welland and Niagara Falls, the Bridge Street landfill in Fort Erie, and the CNR Victoria Avenue landfill in Niagara Falls.

This background paper provides a general discussion of the supply, recharge, and contamination of groundwater in the Fraser River estuary area, followed by sections on various potential groundwater contamination sources including solid waste dumps and landfills; liquid discharge to ground; spreading of fertilizers, soil conditioners, sewage sludge, and pesticides; and leaking underground storage tanks. The nature and magnitude of the waste management problem is defined for each source, along with the legislation, programs, and current and recommended best management practices. Action needs, that may include research, public awareness, or development and implementation of control measures, are then summarized.

This paper describes population, household, and potential housing demand projections generated using the CMHC Potential Housing Demand Projection Model. It derives demand projections from the projected annual increase in the total number of households. Results, which cover the 1986-2011 period, consist of base and alternative projection series, each distinguished by a different combination of immigration, interprovincial migration, and headship rate assumptions. It discusses base national results in detail, as well as the impacts of alternative projection assumptions at both national and regional levels.

by M.E. Hagen. New Westminster, B.C. : Fraser River Estuary Management Program, Waste Management Activity Program, 1990. v, 23 p. Bibliogr. MICROLOG 92-06736 1 fiche

While the major sources of contaminants to the Fraser River estuary are from municipal sewage treatment plants, industrial effluents, stormwater discharges, or agricultural discharges, there are a number of other sources which, while generally minor, may result in significant localized impacts. These include sources that are on, in, over, or beside the water, including floating homes and water craft, log booms, marine timbers, shipyards, and bridges. This background paper is subdivided into 13 sections, each considering a source or area of potential contamination. The nature and magnitude of the waste management problem is defined for each source, along with the legislation, programs, and current and recommended best management practices. Action needs, that may include research, public awareness, or development and implementation of control measures, are then summarized.

Le Potentiel de la télévision avec sous-titres pour l'apprentissage des adultes

Le but de ce rapport a été de déterminer dans quelle mesure la télévision avec sous-titres codés, peut répondre, de façon efficace, aux besoins des étudiants adultes. Les auditoires au Canada, aux États-Unis, en Europe et en Australie ont été étudiés comme toile de fond, pour orienter les initiatives, en ce domaine. Le rapport passe en revue des études expérimentales sur la télévision avec sous-titres codés, menées auprès des étudiants adultes de l'anglais, langue seconde, ainsi qu'auprès des adultes en difficulté d'apprentissage. On décrit les marchés qui s'offrent à la télévision avec sous-titres codés, dans le domaine de l'apprentissage des adultes, en Ontario, ainsi que les programmes, actuellement offertes, à cette clientèle. On aborde la question des contextes pédagogiques qui conviennent le mieux à cet apprentissage, et donne des recommandations concernant la prochaine phase de la recherche, relative aux bandes magnétoscopiques sous-titrées, dans diverses situations d'apprentissage, en classe et avec des apprenants, de capacités variées

A Practical algorithm for finding the largest clique in a graph

by M.W. Carter and M. Gendreau. Montreal : Université de Montréal, Centre de recherche sur les transports, 1992. ii, 23 p. Bibliogr. (Publication ; no. 820)
MICROLOG 92-07824 1 fiche

This paper presents a simple, recursive, polynomial-time heuristic for finding the largest clique in a graph. The number of levels of recursion are limited. Computational results on a wide variety of both random and practical test problems with up to 587 nodes indicates that the heuristic is fast and generally optimal. When the limit is removed on the recursion levels, the algorithm will find the optimal solution. For uniform random graphs with edge density less than 50%, this algorithm is expected to be exponential in half the log of number of vertices. This result is generalized to virtually all other branch-and-bound algorithms for solving the maximum clique (maximum independent set) problem. Computational results provide some empirical evidence to support this statement.

The Tuktoyaktuk Peninsula lies to the northeast of the Mackenzie Delta in the Northwest Territories. In late 1986, a geological study of pre-Mesozoic strata underlying the Peninsula, based on borehole data, was initiated to gather as much information as possible about the geological history, stratigraphy, and structure and to develop a model pertaining to these three components. This involved a detailed study of almost all ditch cutting samples and core from the entire Peninsula to compare the stratigraphy with that of the adjacent Northern Interior Plains. Many cores and cutting intervals were sampled for microfossil ages and other data to assist in correlation. Wireline logs, lithology logs, and well history reports were used to obtain the correlation and structural information, and seismic lines were used to resolve structural questions.

In 1986, over 5,000 cottagers on 214 Central Ontario lakes were surveyed via questionnaire on the extent of the shoreline of their respective lake affected by filamentous green algae (primarily metaphytic growths of members of the Zygnematales). Accuracy of cottager perceptions were determined by comparison to field survey data of algal growths at 32 of the lakes. A predictive model based upon cottager perceptions was able to classify lakes according to algal abundance with over 90 percent accuracy. Water chemistry data for 191 of the 1986 survey lakes were compared to the cottager algal abundance estimates to determine if water chemistry could be used to predict algal abundance. The discriminant analysis models were then applied to water chemistry data from larger lake data bases (735 and 5,276 lakes).

Preliminary analysis of control cable response to lightning disturbances at a nuclear power station

by S.M. Harvey. Toronto : Ontario Hydro, Research Division, 1991. 13 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Report ; no. 91-147-K)
MICROLOG 92-02024 1 fiche

Following reports of lightning-related electrical and instrumentation faults, an investigation of the on-site wiring and grounding at Bruce Nuclear Generating Station B was conducted. A preliminary visit in the fall of 1989 implicated the power and control cables running in underground ducts between the powerhouse and outbuildings containing the standby generators SG5 and SG6. It was hypothesized that a lightning stroke near these buildings produced a large current in the grounding grid between the standby generators and the powerhouse, resulting in a high ground potential difference and induced interfering voltages and currents on the power and control cables. The study was conducted to generate more information on the effectiveness of shielding and grounding practices used for long control and annunciation cables, and focused on the effect of lowering the grounding grid impedance and shielding the wiring and cabling

This report presents a review and assessment of the geology and mineral resources of the Plaster Rock Basin and adjacent area in Victoria County, New Brunswick. Information was taken from published and unpublished reports and mineral exploration reports. Additional data were acquired through field investigations carried out during the summer and fall of 1990, followed up by laboratory studies. The report gives a general guide to the physiographic and geological setting of the area, including background information on stratigraphy, structure, and surficial geology and an inventory and preliminary assessment of the area's mineral resources. The mineral inventory contains details of the distribution, quality, quantity, and potential significance of the region's more notable mineral resources, including limestone, gypsum, aggregates, and base metals.

A Preliminary assessment of the Nipigon River landslide, 1990

MICROLOG 92-02008 1 fiche

On April 23, 1990, a landslide occurred on the east bank of the Nipigon River 8 km downstream of the Alexander Generating Station. Two studies were conducted to determine the reasons for the landslide and they concluded that one factor was the drawdown of the River levels for the generating station. Ontario Hydro also assessed the impact of the River level fluctuations caused by the Alexander Generating Station operation on the downstream banks. Phase I of the study was a literature review and airphoto study of the area to determine the site geology, drainage pattern, land forms and land use, and to identify the presence of any old bank failures or land slides in the area. This report gives the results of Phase II, which reviewed the available geotechnical data and presented a parametric analysis. An assessment was made of the relative importance of the factors that may have caused the failure, using results from field measurements on the relationship between discharge rate and River level fluctuation, and River channel profile.

As part of the Flair Homes Energy Demo/Canadian Home Builders' Association Flair Mark XIV Project, a preliminary assessment was conducted of an exterior shade screen system designed to reduce residential cooling loads by restricting solar gains through windows. As part of the analysis, the design cooling loads were estimated for a typical 147 sq m bungalow using various window types and glazing distributions in Winnipeg, Manitoba, and Toronto. A series of field observations was also made of the screens installed on four typical bungalows in Winnipeg.

Task Force, 1991. ix, 99 p. : maps. Bibliogr. MICROLOG 92-05172 2 fiche

The Benson Lake watershed is located on northern Vancouver Island, about 15 km east of the town of Port Alice and is part of the Marble River drainage. The Benson Lake Coast Copper Mine, owned by Cominco Ltd., began operations in August 1962 and operated until January 1973. Over the operating period, the lake showed increased levels of turbidity and zinc, eliminating the benthic organisms and causing the fish to change their diet. This study is the second stage of a series of field studies to assess the lake's recovery from subaqueous disposal of reactive mine wastes. The report concludes the preliminary assessment of Benson Lake and is a continuation of the 1989-90 field program. The report focuses on the chemical and biological aspects of changes in Benson Lake following subaqueous tailings disposal. Keogh Lake, located about 12 km to the northwest of Benson Lake, was used as a control for water chemistry, sediments, and biota (excluding aquatic macrophytes). The biota examined included phytoplankton, zooplankton, benthic invertebrates, aquatic macrophytes, and fish.

Current legislation in Ontario imposes stringent limitations on the concentration of copper, nickel, and chromium in electroplating shop effluents which may be discharged to municipal sewer systems. This study established the quality and composition of sludge generated in southern Ontario and prepared a preliminary economic evaluation of centralized processing of sludge to produce metal concentrates or intermediate for sale to existing markets. A hydrometallurgical process was used that gave high extraction of the three metals and permitted a selective precipitation of the metals from solution into separate marketable concentrates. The report contains a survey of available sludge in southern Ontario, design criteria for a centralized processing plant, estimated capital and operating costs for the project, typical sales terms for the plant's products, and a project cash flow summary.

A Preliminary evaluation to determine whether supported liquid membrane technology is a viable technique to recover metals from acid mine drainage

by R.A.J. May. Fredericton : Dept. of Natural Resources and Energy, Minerals Resources Division, 1991. 26 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Open file report ; 91-15) ISSN 1183-5508 MICROLOG 92-02087 1 fiche

Many streams from mine sites in N.B. contain significant quantities of heavy metals which might be recovered. At present, the effluent is treated by adding either lime or limestone to the stream and precipitating dissolved heavy metals as hydroxides and sulphate as gypsum. One novel method to recover dissolved metals is solvent extraction using supported liquid membrane technology, a technique which appears to offer economic potential. While it has not been tried in the mining industry, variations of it are used in the food and pharmaceutical industries. This study determined whether supported liquid membrane technology is a viable method for recovering metals, particularly zinc, from acidic drainage streams. Experiments were carried out with a laboratory membrane mediated test unit. AP NR PR PS SC

Although studies have been done on the relative costs incurred by retailers on such items as taxes, little or no work has been done to understand the nature of the price differentials as goods move from source through channels of distribution in both Canada and the U.S., nor the components or underlying causes of the price differences. This study examines three distinct product categories: consumer electronics, bedding and linen, and women's sportswear. It identifies the channels of distribution for these products in the U.S. and Canada, identifies major issues affecting costs and pricing, and recommends further research initiatives.

Acid drainage associated with the oxidation of pyritic slates in several areas of Nova Scotia have contributed to the degradation of surface and groundwater supplies. The waste generated at the Victoria Junction coal preparation plant contains pyrite with a potential through oxidation to cause acid runoff. This project studied the feasibility of using a circulating fluidized bed combustion (CFBC) ash to stabilize the coal preparation plant waste. The CFBC ashes contain a high percentage of calcium by virtue of the CFBC process, with the calcium generally in the oxide (CaO) or sulphate (CaSO<sub>4</sub>) form. Sixteen concrete mixtures were studied using various combinations of CFBC ash, Lingan Class F fly ash, Portland cement, and preparation plant waste. Strength testing was conducted. A second phase of the program studied the performance of four proposed cementitious sealants for encapsulation. These concrete mixtures consisted of Portland cement, Lingan Class F fly ash, silica fume, concrete sand, and small sized gravel. The mixtures also incorporated polypropylene fibres at a dosage of 4 kg/cu m to reduce the potential for plastic cracking to occur, and also to provide ductility to the concrete sealant.

Black spruce is the most important pulpwood species in northwestern Ontario and regeneration of black spruce on sites that have been harvested is critical in providing enough high quality wood for the pulp industry in the future. Regeneration of the species is complicated, depending on a number of site factors, including site type, seedbed microsite type, and competing vegetation. Many of the existing natural black spruce stands in northwestern Ontario have originated after wildfire. Prescribed burning after harvesting is a method used to take advantage of one of the principal ecological processes responsible for the regeneration of black spruce. This report discusses the reasons for burning, the objectives related to regeneration of black spruce, site types, and the effect of fire on black spruce ecosystems, including nutrients, competition responses, and growth responses.

Pressure and temperature dependence of interfacial tensions and contact angles in oil/water and bitumen/water systems : final report

principal investigator: A.W. Neumann. Toronto : University of Toronto, Dept. of Mechanical Engineering, 1991. 82 p. : ill. Bibliogr. CANMET contract: 23440-99002-01-SS.

MICROLOG 92-06282 1 fiche

Interfacial tension is one of the main parameters controlling oil recovery in most tertiary recovery schemes; similarly the contact angle that is formed at the intersection of the interfaces bounding the oil/water/rock phases play a crucial role in secondary recovery (water flooding). As the pressure in a reservoir is usually several hundred atmospheres and the temperature is about 200C, the relevant interfacial tension and contact angle must be measured under these conditions. Since previous experimental methodology has not been or could not be applied, the axisymmetric drop shape analysis (ADSA) was adopted to measure these conditions. This project was conducted to determine interfacial tensions and to carry out a fundamental study of contact angle phenomenon under realistic conditions. The project produced fundamental understanding of pressure and temperature dependence of oil/water and bitumen/water interfacial tensions and contact angle phenomena and developed strategies to optimize the interfacial tension parameters for enhanced oil and bitumen recovery.

Smoke spreads rapidly from the fire region to other areas in the building through leakage openings in the floor construction and vertical shafts. Since stairwells are the main means of escape from a building, they should be effectively protected during a fire. One method of doing this is the pressurization technique, involving increasing the pressure inside the shaft above those of immediately surrounding floor spaces by injecting outdoor air with a supply fan. A knowledge of the airflow resistance inside the stairwell, which has a significant impact on the pressure distribution, is required for analysis of airflow network and prediction of smoke movement computer models. This study investigated the effect of various stair configurations, floor heights, and people on the pressure loss.

The SLAR (spacer location and relocation) system uses rotary gap measurement scans to determine how best to unload garter springs in preparation for their relocation. In certain fuel channels, the results from these scans have been consistently inaccurate, to the point of preventing any meaningful determination of where the spring is pinched. This report describes an approach for improving the thickness compensation scheme of the gap measurement system based on an estimate of the EC thickness response and not just on raw UT thickness measurements.

Because of increased concern over development and growth in the province, the Coastal Protection Area was created in March 1991 and a temporary moratorium was placed on some types of coastal development. In July 1991, the government released its general land use policy. This policy document replaces the Coastal Protection Area moratorium, addressing subdivisions and building; the best ways to ensure that public access to the shore is maintained as development proceeds; and the need for environmental protection of the beaches and dunes, wetlands, and estuaries along the shore.

The Priority Health Problems in Medical Education task force was established in 1984 to assist health science education institutions to focus on the state of health of the community or society, the particular populations at risk, the factors which predispose individuals to ill health, and the factors and interventions which benefit health. Task Force II was directed to develop analytic tools to help the faculty of health sciences educational institutions to identify the major health problems of the region served by them and to display these in prioritized, scientifically valid, and understandable fashion; and to develop strategies for incorporating this analysis into the curricula of medical schools. This report describes the project developments and the participants; the activities undertaken, including the Bellagio conference in Italy in 1985, preparation in home institutions, site visits, and McMaster study blocks; and case studies in Canada, Egypt, Finland, Indonesia, Nigeria, and Thailand.

The observation that wiring configuration codes could be correlated with measurements of power-frequency magnetic fields inside the home has supported speculation that the wiring code may be a surrogate for residential magnetic field exposure. This report evaluates the extent of misclassification of study subjects resulting from the use of the standard Wertheimer-Leeper code as a surrogate for magnetic field exposure.

Any complex military system or scenario that involves electro-optics requires the solution to one or many diffraction problems. This includes propagation of radiations through natural aerosols, smokes/obscurements, design and evaluation of high precision optical systems, and novel laser cavities. This report describes a technique that, for many diffraction-type integrals, gives an approximate but efficient analytic solution, reducing the computational effort considerably while retaining the physical insight essential for system design or scenario analysis. Specific integrals involved in the estimation of extinction form obscuring and other aerosols are for the first time completely resolved analytically. These analytical solutions are applicable to infrared and millimeter wave smokes as well as to biological and natural aerosols.

Recent studies have identified the lack of appropriate signage as a major issue in meeting the needs of travellers with visual, hearing or cognitive disabilities. Environmental communications systems are designed for the able-bodied adult with above-average vision and hearing. This report identifies and describes the procedures and other considerations involved in the implementation of new information signage and/or communication systems in such transportation terminals as airports, ferry terminals, bus and railway stations. The report focuses on the changes needed, the major users, methods of change, difficulties of change, and the measurement and regulation of successful changes.

Procedures for out-of-classroom programs -- Updated

North York, Ont. : North York Board of Education, Curriculum Services Dept., 1988. iii, 34 p. ONTERIS: CD09497.
Not available from Micromedia Ltd.

Presents guidelines for out-of-classroom programs in 5 sections, which provide: a rationale for out-of-classroom education, procedures (trips not officially approved, trips approved by board policy, principal approval, assistant superintendent approval, parental approval, records of events, funds); supervision (ratios, emergency communications, list of participants, use of supply teachers, after-hours access to school building); safety (safety procedures, water safety, procedures in case of student injury or illness, health insurance outside Canada); and transportation (board and chartered buses, highway coaches, public transportation, private motor vehicle, boat tours, air travel, train travel, student travel arrangements). Appendices contain sample office records, permission forms, approval requests, policies, and regulations.

Procedures for the division of the waters of the St. Mary and Milk Rivers, 1991

prepared by United States Geological Survey, Dept. of the Interior, and Water Resources Branch, Inland Waters Directorate, Environment Canada. Helena, MT : The Survey ; Calgary, Alta. : The Branch, 1991. iv, 161 p. : ill., maps. Bibliogr.
MICROLOG 92-00395 2 fiche

The division of the waters of the St. Mary River and Milk River, including its tributaries, is governed by the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909, which specifies the proportion of the natural flow to which each country is entitled. Natural flow computations are done on an interim basis to provide near real-time information for water management decisions to ensure that each country receives its share of the flow. This report documents the procedures and assumptions used in determining natural flow and the reasoning for certain procedures or assumptions, and acts as a user's manual for computing the natural flow on an interim and annual basis. The manual is organized into main sections dealing with the St. Mary River, Milk River, and the Eastern tributaries of the Milk River. Maps, schematics, blank computation forms, and mailing lists for interim and final reports are also included.

MICROLOG 92-02578 1 fiche

The striped bass is indigenous to coastal waters of the Maritime Provinces, supporting a small commercial fishery in the past as a by-catch species in the shad fishery and becoming increasingly popular as a sport fish. This document presents papers given at workshop presentations, including a history of the fishery in the Bay of Fundy, population biology, management and restoration in Maine and New Brunswick, research being conducted, culture techniques, and observations on striped bass in the Shubenacadie River system. Two position statements are also included, dealing with culture and management in the Maritimes, and possible introduction into P.E.I.

A Process for the efficient conversion of waste pine to ethanol

Bio-Hol Developments. Ottawa : Canada Centre for Mineral and Energy Technology, Efficiency and Alternative Energy Technology Branch, 1991. xv, 230 p. : ill. Bibliogr. CANMET contract: 23216-9-9018-01-SZ. ISBN 0-662-19245-1
MICROLOG 92-03683 3 fiche

Final report of a project, carried out as an international effort between Canadian (Bio-hol), American (TVA), and Swedish (SEDF) groups, to establish operating conditions and identify the process equipment necessary for the conversion of pine into ethanol. A two-stage weak acid hydrolysis system formed the basis of a comprehensive process design (CASI process). Bio-Hol was involved in the process design and conducted pilot-scale examinations of cellulose hydrolysis, separation, and fermentation. TVA optimized the hemicellulose hydrolysis process and provided engineering expertise. The SEDF provided the engineering drawings and the mass balance-economic model. The optimum operating conditions for the SO<sub>2</sub>-catalyzed hemicellulose hydrolysis of pine chips were established using TVA's Sunds Deltabator.

The Wellgreen deposit is located in the Klane District of the Yukon, 315 km northwest of Whitehorse and 14 km west of the Alaska Highway. The deposit was discovered in 1952 and was mined from 1972-73. In recent years there has been renewed interest in the deposit, with particular emphasis on the platinum group (PG) element content. This report presents results from an analysis of eight samples from the deposit. The first five samples consisted of drill core rejects and were studied to determine the mineralogy, in particular that of the PG elements. The second series of three samples consisted of drill core and were studied mineralogically to provide guidance for mineral processing and a base of consideration of metallurgical options.

University of Waterloo. Dept. of Chemical Engineering. Ottawa : Energy, Mines and Resources Canada, Canada Centre for Mineral and Energy Technology, Efficiency and Alternative Energy Technology Branch, 1991. viii, 98 p. : ill. Bibliogr. CANMET contract: 23283-86067. ISBN 0-662-19739-9

Earlier work in the laboratory had shown that it was possible to hydrogasify wood directly at atmospheric pressure in a fluidized bed of nickel catalyst at operating conditions corresponding to those that were optimal for maximum liquid yields in the Waterloo fast pyrolysis process. It was thought that it might be possible to produce higher hydrocarbons by the same method with suitably modified catalysts. This project investigated the possibility of direct single step production of light hydrocarbons (C<sub>2</sub>) from wood or cellulose by a process called catalytic hydrolysis. A wide range of catalytic metals, singly or in combination, were investigated, as well as three supports. Metals investigated include iron, nickel, cobalt, zinc, zirconium, chromium, molybdenum, tungsten, silicon, aluminum, titanium, and magnesium.

Outlines emphasis and directions in the Middlesex County Board of Education's Program Plan for 1989-90, identifies the implementation responsibilities pertaining to the Board's objectives and overviews, the implementation plans, and timelines for each objective. Amongst the Plan's objectives are initiatives to continue to develop and implement student retention strategies in elementary and secondary schools, to refine long range planning approaches within all responsibility areas, to investigate the implementation of Junior Kindergarten programs required by the Ministry of Education, to identify and remove any sex, race, ethnic aboriginal stereotyping, and to continue the refinements in student evaluation. The Plan's initiatives also include the continuing implementation of the Computer, Technological Studies, Business studies, Primary and Junior Science, French Immersion, and Science Laboratory Safety Plans. They also advocate the development and implementation of a Library Renewal Plan and a Primary Education Renewal Plan. In its outline of curriculum policy the document identifies the roles and responsibilities of the ministry, the Board, the school, the teachers, and the learners.

MICROLOG 92-00325 1 fiche

Depuis quelques années, on parle beaucoup d'immigration au Canada. Au cours des 15 dernières années, le niveau d'immigration a beaucoup varié; après avoir atteint le chiffre record de 218 465 en 1974, il est tombé à 84 302 en 1985. Ce bulletin d'actualité se penche sur le programme canadien d'immigration et examine particulièrement les généralités, la structure du programme, l'établissement des niveaux d'immigration, les catégories d'immigrants, les rôles des provinces, l'établissement, et les visas de visiteur.

Le Programme, la clé : synthèse

Fédération canadienne des enseignantes et des enseignants...et al. Ottawa : la Fédération, 1989. i, 73, i, 68 p. Bilingue (Curriculum at the centre...). Synthèse de la Conférence nationale sur le programme d'étude, l'enseignement et le leadership.
MICROLOG 92-00941 2 fiche

Ce programme s'appuie sur l'idée que le programme d'études est le résultat de l'expérience des élèves dans les écoles et sur une reconnaissance profonde du besoin d'une nouvelle vision en matière d'éducation, pour faire face aux attentes d'une société en pleine évolution. Lors d'une présentation sur vidéo, au cours de la première soirée de la conférence, les représentants de sept organismes nationaux qui ont parrainé la rencontre se sont penchés sur les défis auxquels les enseignants devront faire face au cours des mois et des années à venir. Ce document en fournit la synthèse.

rédaçion: Thérèse Colin. Québec : Office des personnes handicapées du Québec, 1991. 69 p. ISBN 2-550-21786-1
MICROLOG 92-02569 1 fiche

Ce guide comprend essentiellement dix-huit chapitres. Le premier chapitre indique quels sont les principaux services d'information où l'on peut se documenter. Le deuxième chapitre porte sur les principales ressources qu'une personne handicapée peut utiliser. Les seize chapitres suivants regroupent les ressources selon les thèmes de la politique d'ensemble 'A part...égale' et l'ajout de deux autres thèmes. Chaque chapitre suit le même modèle: le titre du chapitre, sur une page unique, accompagné d'une définition du thème, sous forme de fiches, des questions que se posent régulièrement les personnes handicapées et les professionnels des réseaux de services, des tableaux qui contiennent les ressources et titres de programmes pouvant répondre aux besoins exprimés; les tableaux sont divisés de la façon suivante: les ressources publiques et parapublique du Québec, ainsi que les ressources fédérales et les ressources privées.

Progress as paradox : a profile of women teachers

by L. MacLeod. Ottawa : Canadian Teachers' Federation, 1988. 64, 62 p. Bibliogr. At head of title: Women and education. Bilingual (Le Paradoxe du progrès...).
MICROLOG 92-00940 2 fiche

Despite the indications that education is in a growth period, women educators are not yet reaping their fair share of the benefits of this growth. Through a statistical overview of the status of women teachers across Canada, this document demonstrates the structural contradictions in which our education system is rooted, contradictions that impede the progress of women educators toward greater equality of opportunity, choice, and representation. It discusses the clash between the goals and ideals of most women educators, and the current hierarchical, bureaucratic structure of education as one of the possible barriers to change. It suggests that women teachers' love of teaching and even the ideology of equal opportunity have been used to benefit men and to penalize women.

Projet sans frontières : final report

Description and analysis of the Ministry of Education's telecommunications pilot-project, 'Projet Sans Frontières,' which twinned 2 classes (grades 5 and 6) from French schools in the Nipissing Separate School Board with similar classes at a Quebec elementary school. Designed to enhance students' language skills through the exploration of new French computer programs, the project also involved frequent exchanges and a field trip. With a mini-network of computers and a precise timetable, students performed learning activities used for evaluation. They developed persistence and pride in their work and self-discipline and were made aware of their communities. The 5 main objectives were: to allow francophone students from different Canadian backgrounds to form bonds which will strengthen their culture, to enhance students' tolerance and open-mindedness, to develop new pedagogical approaches using micro-computers and telecommunications in the classroom, to encourage the exchange of this expertise between educators of both provinces, and to share the project's findings with school boards in Ontario. The success of these objectives exceeded expectations. An evaluation of the Implementation Plan details the stages, participants, time line, and methods used. A teachers's report details the training, integration procedures and assistance from technician and resource personnel. The Principal's Report declares the project a success and pledges to continue it. Recommendations were: 2-day training sessions be planned for new participants; the host-school lab be modified for the project's second year; the team continue to inform parents and teachers of the project's development; school principals take part in training sessions; an initial 3-day training session for all participants; a half-day a month of professional development for teachers; and the choice of software be reviewed. Includes a financial report and appendices.

by F. Baldwin. Ottawa : Atomic Energy Control Board, 1991. ix, 49 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Research report ; INFO-0391) MICROLOG 92-05916 1 fiche

Basal cells have long been regarded as progenitors of human bronchial epithelium and important in the development of lung cancer, but most data relating to laboratory animals indicate the basal cell may not be the sole proliferative element. This study identified and enumerated the proliferating cells of the air passages; established the nature of typical and atypical basal cells; determined the ultrastructure of basal cells and their relationship to adjacent cells; and related the information obtained to physiological parameters of importance to radiation dosimetry. Assessment of cell proliferation was tested in tissue known to contain substantial populations of proliferating cells, following which proliferating cells were identified in multiple bronchi from seven adult surgical cases by Ki-67 immunolabelling.

Promoting the generalization of knowledge : a developmental approach to teaching metaphorical thinking

by P.J. Gamlin. Toronto : Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, 1988. 83 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Working paper ; 88-04) ONTERIS: ON05432.
MICROLOG 92-07237 1 fiche

Investigates the cognitive processing skills that allow knowledge to be generalized across multiple contexts. Current research on knowledge acquisition and restructuring is summarized, and the theory advanced that the generalization of knowledge rests not on the perception of common structures across tasks but on individuals' reflection on their existing knowledge base. The generalization of knowledge requires not only specific domain understanding but also the co-ordination of this knowledge into a particular sequence of procedural steps the new task demands. It is through the mental activity of metaphorical thinking, that one is able to consider the new task in relation to one's prior knowledge of specific skills. This enables the learner to establish initial representation of the problem whereby the co-ordination of procedural steps is made possible. Generalization of knowledge is based on the mental activities used to establish the legitimacy of analogy and metaphor for linking what had previously been considered disparate domains of experience. Metaphorical thinking may be the meta-cognitive activities in the generalization of knowledge that are at work as the individual considers disparate domains, thereby using strategies in contexts different from those instructed. Several types of similar thinking types are established, varying the levels of metaphorical complexity, in order to investigate the attainment of within type concepts, from simplified to more complex versions of these tasks. Instruction in metaphorical thinking does not allow the child to go beyond her former level of development to achieve a new level of consciousness. Further research into the implication of the development of metaphorical thinking in the classroom is needed. Includes a bibliography, and the 48 figures that accompany the typology of the tasks.

Promotion of flowering in a Sitka spruce seed orchard by stem injections of gibberellin A4/7

by S.D. Ross. Victoria : Ministry of Forests, 1991. v, 5 p. Bibliogr. (Research note ; no. 107) ISSN 0226-9368 ISBN 0-7718-9080-X

Sitka spruce is a minor but potentially important tree improvement species in B.C. While four of the five private and cooperative seed orchards established since 1971 are productive, the exception is Western Forest Products' private 9-year-old orchard no. 157 at Lost Lake. Flowering in many conifers is enhanced by exogenous applications of the plant growth regulator mixture gibberellin A4/7 (GA4/7) and its efficacy is often enhanced by girdling and other cultural treatments. This study was undertaken to evaluate the effectiveness of GA4/7 plus girdling, vs girdling alone, for promoting flowering in a poorly producing Sitka spruce seed orchard.

In its natural range on the western slopes of the Rocky Mountains in southern B.C. and the northwestern U.S., western larch is highly valued for its rapid growth, high quality wood, and resistance to root diseases. Attempts to regenerate the species are hampered by chronic shortages of good seed. This paper reports on the flowering response by young plantation-grown western larch to GA4/7 stem injections and stem girdles, each alone and in combination, vs. no treatment. Recommendations are provided for the selection and treatment of seed production areas as an interim measure until such time as clonal seed orchards come into production during the mid- to late-1990s. The potential for containerized orchards is discussed as well.

Propagation mechanisms of molten fuel/moderator interactions

MICROLOG 92-04389 1 fiche

It is well known that a vapour explosion can result when molten metal is suddenly brought into contact with a cold volatile liquid such as water, but in spite of numerous experimental investigations, both laboratory and large-scale as well as theoretical modelling, the basic propagation mechanisms of energetic vapour explosions are not well understood. This report provides brief reviews of earlier work on the propagation stage of a steam explosion and on hydrodynamic fragmentation. The report then describes work done to determine the time scale for the fragmentation of one drop, liquid metal drops (in thermal equilibrium with water), and hot molten drops surrounded by a vapour film subjected to underwater shocks with overpressures of up to about 20 MPa. A model for the fine fragmentation process for a hot drop is proposed that is based on thermal effects.

The Junction California bighorn sheep range lies at the confluence of the Fraser and Chilcotin Rivers. There are currently 400-500 sheep in the area, the largest northernmost California bighorn sheep population in North America. During the past four years, lamb survival has decreased and studies have indicated that the only probable variable is the population of coyotes and cougars preying upon the herds. This project is being conducted to monitor and improve lamb survival through the removal of coyotes during the winter and spring of 1986/87 and 1987/88, to radio-collar and monitor cougar populations at the Junction and/or Deer Park to determine spatial and temporal use of the sheep range by season, seasonal density and sex and age-specific predation by cougar for sheep; and to manage the sheep, cougar, and coyote populations to provide the proper ratios of sheep to predators.

Many processes were developed to chemically stabilize and solidify industrial wastes. This evaluation protocol is a decision-making tool for managing stabilized-solidified (S/S) wastes which could be used in a regulatory framework. For that purpose, the protocol is based on the measurement of several physical, engineering, and chemical properties of S/S wastes in order to evaluate different utilization and disposal scenarios. Several of the testing methods in the protocol were evaluated in a cooperative project with the industry initiated by Environment Canada; others are methods recommended by standards organizations in the fields of hazardous and radioactive wastes, and some properties of S/S wastes are measured using methods that are still in their development stage. The protocol evaluates both level 1, based on contaminant partitioning, and level 2, based on physical entrapment.

Alterations in circulating levels of sex steroids were found in fish captured near bleached kraft pulp mills, and are associated with a number of other physiological and whole organism responses. The Environmental Effects Monitoring Requirements for Pulp and Paper Mills recommends the measurement of gonadal sex steroids as a sensitive indication of the potential for reproductive impacts. Circulating levels can be measured with a variety of methods, but the only approach currently satisfying the requirements of sensitivity to picogram levels and widely available commercially is that of radioimmunoassay (RIA). There is no universal protocol for steroid hormone analysis by RIA. This report outlines an assay protocol successfully used for the past 12 years in a research laboratory. It includes the measurement of two sex steroids in fish blood and identifies what data must be collected, when and how it is to be collected, and how positive and negative responses are to be interpreted.

The measurement of the activity of fish liver detoxication enzymes, the mixed function oxygenases (MFOs), is proposed as a tool for monitoring the environmental effects of marine petroleum pollution on fish. MFO activity was tested as an indicator of the presence of chemical contamination from urban and industrial development in over 30 field trials and was included in the North Sea monitoring master plan. This document describes the measurement of fish liver MFO activity as a tool for monitoring chemical contamination associated with effluent from pulp mills using chlorine bleaching (bleached kraft mill effluent or BKME). It includes the biochemistry, toxicology, and measurement of the MFO enzymes in fish and identifies what data should be collected, how they should be collected, and how positive and negative responses should be interpreted.

The Provincial Water Quality Monitoring Network in northwestern Ontario consists of 51 stations established since 1968 to monitor surface water quality in rivers and creeks throughout the region. Stations were selected to represent background conditions and impacts of industrial or urban sources. The information summarized in this report is organized by major watershed, moving from east to west across the region. The characteristics of each station are described, including location, activities that affect water quality, and trends observed in key parameters. Water quality is determined through conventional parameters, bacteria, and metals, with as many as 40 tests per station. Chlorinated organic compounds are not part of this data set.

The provision for tax supported public libraries in Manitoba offering free access to all citizens have been the standard service model since the Manitoba Municipal Act of 1893. A century later, the province has 48.5 percent of its population outside of Winnipeg still unserved. This study looks specifically at the southwestern region of the province which, for no apparent reason, has the unique situation of a large number of served municipalities interspersed with unserved municipalities. It compares the results of questionnaire surveys in a number of unserved areas to statistics for served municipalities. It offers conclusions.

Recently, the federal government has launched a program of privatization both with regard to Crown corporations and within the conventional government organization of departments and agencies. In some cases, hybrid governmental entities have been created, including mixed public/private companies and the Special Operating Agencies. This paper outlines briefly the key features of each of these organizational forms for the delivery of federal policies and services. The appendices to the paper list all federal departments, agencies, and Crown corporations.

Lingcod have been heavily exploited in the Strait of Georgia, B.C., since the early 1900s, with catches of over 2,000 tons regularly achieved in the 1940s. Since the 1950s, however, catch, effort, and size of the fishing fleet have decreased, with the 1989 catch only 74 tons and the recreational catch approximately 84 tons. In 1989, a program began to evaluate potential monitoring strategies. A SCUBA survey of lingcod nests, a purse-seine survey of post-larval lingcod, and surveys of juvenile lingcod were initiated. Beak Consultants. Burlington, Ont. Environment Canada, Conservation and Protection, National Water Research Institute, 1991. iv, 105 p. : ill. Bibliogr.
MICROLOG 92-01716 2 fiche

The implementation of legislation such as the Canadian Environmental Protection Act (CEPA) and the Ontario Municipal-Industrial Strategy for Abatement (MISA) have increased the need to use biological criteria to assess the impact of contaminants and effluents on the environment. This document describes the basic elements of an internal QA/QC program based on the principles of good laboratory practice, and then goes on to describe the application of these principles in specific biological subject areas. Topics include aquatic toxicity testing, benthic community assessment, microbiological assessment and paleolimnology. A QA checklist for toxicity testing is provided which draws attention to key areas such as water supply, animal controls, dose selection and LC50 calculations that are known to affect data quality. The document also identifies the need for initiation of interlaboratory QA studies and follow-up investigations; method inconsistencies associated with taxonomy, sample seasons and methodologies; and conservation and sorting techniques which often limit the suitability of data for temporal and spatial comparisons.

MICROLOG 92-00257 2 fiche

Decommissioned municipal solid waste landfill sites often rely exclusively on the use of an earthen cover to restrict the access of precipitation to the underlying refuse material. While some infiltration of precipitation is necessary for the vegetative growth on the site, too much can cause leaching into groundwater and accelerated subsidence. A set of three identical lysimeters were installed into filled areas of both the Guelph and Barrie municipal solid waste landfill sites. The Guelph cover consisted of a 1.0 m layer of locally available gravelly loam soil overlaid with a 20 cm layer of loam topsoil. The Barrie site consisted of a 1.5 m thick layer of sand. The lysimeter design was based on prototypes constructed and tested in previous studies. Lysimeter installation was completed by December 1989 and infiltration rates were monitored for 12 months at both sites. Two techniques were used for measuring the volume of infiltrated water collected in the lysimeter storage zones and the techniques were later evaluated for their accuracy and ease of application. Tests were also conducted in the field to simulate infiltration events to assist the analysis of monitored lysimeter infiltration measurements and calculated values were compared with actual values.

This paper describes an attempt to quantify textual data obtained from semi-structured interviews. A content analysis of transcripts from interviews in 1985 with 162 high school dropouts in Edmonton, Alberta was used to construct coding categories. These categories were then used to create a numerical data set which was merged with data from standardized questionnaires completed by the same subjects. Assessment of information adequacy, and of the efficiency and research utility of this approach was conducted. Data was designed to provide insights into the reasons for leaving school, relationships with family and friends following school exit, job search and employment histories, and the experience and consequences of unemployment.

A Quantitative method for the evaluation of silica flux used in copper smelting

Bibliogr. CANMET contract: 23440-9-9297-01-SS.

MICROLOG 92-01273 1 fiche

In the smelting of copper and copper/nickel concentrates or mattes, silica flux aids in the removal of iron by forming a slag phase and controls the formation of magnetite, which can severely hinder the operation of a furnace. To properly control the magnetite level, the flux must react rapidly with all of the FeO in the bath. Flux materials are currently chosen based on their silica content and on the knowledge of furnace operators, a process which disregards both the melting point and the free silica content of the flux. This report describes a rapid method for silica flux evaluation which can be used directly within the smelter. Samples of flux were mixed with iron sulphide and magnetite and smelted at 1250C, using argon as a carrier gas for any gaseous products and analyzing continuously for sulphur dioxide. The effect of silica content, silica particle size, and silicate mineralogy were investigated using the test apparatus and the relative importance of free silica and melting point were studied using synthetic flux mixtures.

Rainbow trout were exposed to waterborne phenol, p-chlorophenol, 2,4-dichlorophenol, p-nitrophenol or 1,2,4-trichlorobenzene for 85 days. This period included full egg development from the day of fertilization, plus hatching, yolk resorption and four weeks of feeding as freely-swimming fry. Mortality of the fish was observed, wet and dry weights and moisture were measured, and QSARS for chronic toxicity were developed by comparing threshold exposure levels to octanol-water partition coefficients by linear regression. Responses of the fish to each chemical were tested by a randomized complete block design for analysis of variance. Effect threshold estimates were also developed.

The surficial geology of the Canterbury map area in southwestern New Brunswick is the result of glaciation in a maritime environment during the Late Wisconsinan. This project was undertaken to describe the nature and style of glacial advance and retreat and to propose a relative chronology of events; to investigate the limits and style of glacial dispersal as indicated by lithological and geochemical components of till and their ability to reflect bedrock sources; and to study ice flow directions and whether they support suspected northward flow in New Brunswick. A total of 273 samples of Late Wisconsinan sediments were collected on a 2 sq km grid during surficial mapping. The samples were analyzed for granulometric, geochemical, and lithological components and results investigated by areal dispersal plots.

A multi-faceted series of investigations of the Quaternary geology of the Peace River region was undertaken in 1990. As part of this program, the southeastern part of the region was mapped in detail using aerial photographs, followed by detailed stratigraphic and sedimentologic field investigations and laboratory analyses of sediment texture and mineralogical composition. This paper discusses the composition, material properties, and genesis of the major types of Quaternary geological units identified throughout the four map areas; evaluates the aggregate and peat deposits and resources in the region, and evaluates the environmental and engineering geological aspects of the region.

The Quaternary geology of Wollaston Peninsula, Victoria Island, was investigated in the early 1980s because of the need for terrain information due to exploration for oil and gas on northern islands, including Victoria Island. This report describes the surficial materials and summarizes the Quaternary history of the peninsula, based on observations from the past 10 years. It provides the framework for and age of Quaternary deposits and landforms; the distribution of permafrost and ground ice relative to these various landforms and deposits; and the effect of recent, particularly preglacial, processes upon the landscape.

The Timmins Drilling Transect component of the Canada-Ontario Mineral Development Agreement (1985-90) provided an unique opportunity to investigate the sequences and origins of the thick blanket of glacial sediments in this area. Traditional methods of exploration for buried mineralized deposits to the north of Timmins were hampered by the thick glacial cover and lack of bedrock or sediment exposure. This project, through deep drilling coupled with geotechnical methods and geochemical sampling, provided baseline data useful to both the mineral industry, through enhanced drift prospecting capabilities, and to researchers investigating the glacial history of the Laurentide Ice Sheet.

Le rôle du Québec dans cet environnement international relativement nouveau qu'est la francophonie ne s'est jamais si bien concrétisé et affirmé qu'à la deuxième Conférence des chefs d'Etat et de gouvernement des pays ayant en commun l'usage du français. Le sommet de Québec a été en quelque sorte le point de focalisation des nombreuses interventions et initiatives du gouvernement du Québec dans les diverses institutions internes francophones qui se sont multipliées depuis le début des années soixante. Ce document se penche précisément sur la question du Québec dans la francophonie, et examine les points suivants: l'historique de la francophonie et la place du Québec; la première Conférence des chefs d'Etat et de gouvernement des pays ayant en commun l'usage du français (le sommet de Paris); la deuxième Conférence des chefs d'Etat et de gouvernement des pays ayant en commun l'usage du français (le sommet de Québec); et, le Québec et ses partenaires dans la francophonie.

The Quesnel Highlands study area lies north of Quesnel Lake and includes Wells Gray Park to the east. The project is being conducted to prevent extreme declines in the caribou populations of the Stevenson and Junction blocks by reducing wolf densities from 1 per 140 sq km to 1 per 700 sq km and to assess the impact of the wolf removal on moose calf survival. No wolf removal will take place in Wells Gray Park or in the Quesnel block, so caribou numbers and calf survival can be compared to those in the removal areas. Wolf numbers will be monitored and additional wolf control may be required over the course of the project if their numbers increase above the target size.

It begins with a lengthy discussion of the history of non-broadcast radio communication in Canada. A brief description of the basic scientific principles upon which radio communication is based follows. An examination of the evolution of radio technology from the earliest mathematical equations and laboratory experiments through the rudimentary systems devised by the first inventors in the field and into the modern era of fully electronic radio technology concludes the paper. Most of the information is taken from government records, both archival and published.

All nuclear generating stations emit small quantities of radioactive effluent both into the atmosphere and, in the form of liquid effluent, into the adjoining water body. This document reports on the magnitude of these emissions for each nuclear generating station in Canada and indicates how these emissions compare with the relevant limitations imposed by the Atomic Energy Control Board as part of its regulatory and licensing program. The report incorporates histograms indicating the annual releases of tritium in air, noble gases, iodine-131, airborne particulate, tritium in water, and waterborne gross beta activity for each nuclear generating station. In addition, for Pickering Nuclear Generating Station A, annual releases of Carbon-14 are depicted for 1986-88, and for Darlington Nuclear Generating Station, airborne emissions of both tritium oxide and elemental tritium are shown. In each case, the emission data are compared to the derived emission limit so that the data may be placed in perspective.

Section 266 of the National Transportation Act, 1987 requires that the National Transportation Act Review Commission consider the extent to which competitive access to railway transportation has been achieved by shippers and the effect of competitive line rates on the revenues, financial viability, capital investment, and service levels of railway companies. This report provides comparisons between competitive access in the rail transportation and telecommunications industries as provided under the Railway Act. The report uses an application for competitive access currently before the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission to compare legislative structures and policies involved in the telecommunications and railway sectors. The application was made by Unitel Communications Inc., a telecommunications company jointly owned by CP and Rogers Communications Inc. Unitel applied to the CRTC in May 1990 for permission to use the equipment of other telephone companies to compete with the equipment owners for the long-distance telephone market. The interconnection of long-distance telephone facilities in the Unitel application is very similar to the sharing of railway traffic through the competitive line rate provisions of the NTA 1987.

The third phase of the rail profile grinding research study examined both traditional corrective rail grinding practices and contemporary preventive rail grinding techniques. Actual grinding production on CP Rail tracks was monitored and analyzed to determine the precision and consistency of the normal grinding process in producing the targeted rail profiles. A total of 71 rails were examined, of which 33 were high rails, 34 were low rails, and 4 were in tangent track. The preventive grinding technique involved field testing at three test locations on BC Rail tracks, with grinding performed at intervals of about 5 MGT on the BC Rail test sites while the CP Rail test sites were ground at approximate intervals of 10 MGT. Each test site was periodically monitored for rail head loss, surface cracking, rail lubrication, sub-surface cracking, and plastic flow. Additional tests were conducted to evaluate the dependence of metal removal rate on grinding speed. Finite element analysis was performed on 136 lb. full and worn rail sections to examine the variation in rail stress.

Section 266 of the National Transportation Act, 1987 requires the Governor in Council to initiate a comprehensive review of the Act and other Acts of Parliament for which the Minister of Transport is responsible that pertain to the economic regulation of a mode of transport. This analysis discusses, pursuant to paragraph 266 (3)(a) of the NTA, 1987 issues related to the effectiveness of the rail rationalization provisions of the Act in achieving an economic, efficient, and adequate network of viable and effective transportation services that are responsive to the needs of shippers. This document describes the rationalization program activity, including rail line abandonments and conveyances; the impacts of such rationalization on shippers and regional development, on the railways, the government, and labour; and the experience in the United States. Emerging issues such as the 4% limit, demarketing, and post abandonment use of rights-of-way are discussed. Future rationalization activity includes restructuring of rail networks and conveying of lines.

Railway linehaul energy intensity : development of an enhanced train-handling module for the AAR train energy model

by J.D. Young...et al. ; for the Transportation Development Centre, Policy and Coordination Group, Transport Canada. Kingston, Ont. : Queen's University, Canadian Institute of Guided Ground Transport, 1990. viii, 23 p. : ill. (CIGGT report ; no. 89-19) CIGGT Project no. PRO-528. ISBN 0-88911-055-7 MICROLOG 92-01825 1 fiche

This report is the third in a series of reports on railway linehaul energy intensity sponsored by Transport Canada. Many applications of a train energy model involve long train runs where it is unacceptable to use predefined or interactive control settings for the locomotive. In addition, train-handling differences can have significant effects on a train's energy consumption. This report outlines a method of integrating a realistic train-handling simulation module into an existing computer program. The host model is the Train Energy Model being developed by the Association of American Railroads. The train-handling module is designed to obey posted speed restrictions in a manner determined by the type of terrain involved and the type of train involved, while offering sensitivities to a range of train-handling techniques. The report describes the structural changes to TEM-4, the new program modules, and detailed block diagrams.

En 1989, le ministère des Ressources naturelles et de l'énergie a soumis au traitement aérien 17 105 ha de peuplements et a régénéré de façon naturelle des déboisés d'essences résineuses sur les terres de la Couronne, au moyen de l'herbicide Vision. Deux études distinctes ont été entreprises en 1990 pour déterminer le succès du programme de 1989. L'une était une analyse intensive au sol destinée à évaluer l'efficacité sur les essences concurrentes, et l'autre, une analyse aérienne exhaustive pour évaluer la couverture de l'arrosage. L'étude au sol a été menée de façon analogue aux autres années, une étude antérieure (effectuée en juin-juillet 1989) et une étude postérieure (effectuée en juin-juillet 1990) ayant été réalisées sur 45 p. cent des régions traitées. L'étude aérienne a été menée de la dernière semaine de juin à la deuxième semaine de juillet 1990. Ce rapport présente les résultats des études.

The student's component of this resource material consists of 6 exercises, each with several problems. Examples (and solutions) are provided for each exercise. Topics are: ratio and rate; plotting graphs; slope; direct variation; graphs of direct variation; and partial variation. A review exercise and solutions to problems complete the document. The teacher's guide lists aims and objectives, then outlines (purpose, method) 10 lessons based on the above topics.

Rationale document for the interim maximum acceptable concentration for N-nitrosodimethylamine (NDMA) in drinking water : report

Ontario. Hazardous Contaminants Coordination Branch. Toronto : The Branch, 1991. ii, 8 p. Bibliogr. ISBN 0-7729-8434-4. MICROLOG 92-00135 1 fiche

N-Nitrosodimethylamine (NDMA) is a simple organic compound that exists as a stable liquid under ambient temperatures and conditions. It is a potent, non-threshold carcinogen in a wide variety of animal species, and is a probable human carcinogen. NDMA is no longer used commercially, but may be an inadvertent by-product of some industries employing amines or nitriles under acidic conditions. In November 1989, high levels of NDMA were detected in the drinking water of Elmira, Ontario. An interim maximum acceptable concentration of 14 parts per trillion in drinking water was adopted from a U.S. Environmental Protection Agency risk assessment. An interministry committee was established to recommend the scientific basis for NDMA guidelines in air, water, and soil. The committee adopted a risk assessment framework, consisting of hazard identification, exposure assessment, dose response assessment, and risk characterization. Exposure was assessed from a multimedia perspective. This document describes the committee's findings and recommendations.

Byzantine Agreement (BA) is one of the most widely studied problems in distributed computing. This paper designs a protocol to achieve an amortized constant number of rounds for repeated Eventual Byzantine Agreement (EBA) that will elect a smaller and smaller council for making BAs on behalf of the others. The paper also introduces a protocol for electing a new council for the simplest case where  $t$  equals 1, i.e., there is at most one traitorous general. The council election protocol is generalized to arbitrary  $t$ , then the council election protocol with an EBA and Byzantine Firing Squad protocol to obtain a complete solution for repeated instances of BA, and prove correctness is introduced. Some open problems are also included.

data which consists of discrete sinusoids, whose phase velocities vary in time in a non-random fashion, as some function of the ocean spectra. The work is being conducted to better characterize HF radar data for target detection.

Reasoning with truth ascriptions, self-reference and embedded sentences in first-order logic

by R.F. Hadley. Burnaby, B.C. : Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science, 1990. 13 p. Bibliogr.
MICROLOG 92-05737 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

This paper presents an alternative to Perlis' logic of truth which would both support truth inferences in the presence of truth ascriptions and permit the representation of nested propositional attitudes. The paper retains a first-order representation language, but arbitrary embedding of propositions is achieved without resort to quotation and concatenation functions. The language of first-order logic (FOL) is chosen and the reasons are described. Truth inferences are sanctioned by the addition of two rules of inference to standard FOL. These rules involve a distinguished truth-predicate (T) and the resulting augmented logic is called T-FOL. Within T-FOL, the objects of which truth, knowledge, and belief are predicated are intensions, rather than particular sentences. This approach enables a many-to-one mapping between particular sentences and the beliefs they express. Applications of T-FOL to inferences involving truth are also described.

Finalement, on examine plusieurs questions analytiques liées à la fiscalité.

La recherche avec tabous est l'une des nouvelles approches qui sont apparues récemment pour la résolution de problèmes combinatoires. Cette méthode se base sur les données historiques de la recherche pour soustraire celle-ci de l'attraction des optimum locaux, du cyclage, et des parcours sous-optimaux. Ce travail constitue un survol de cette méthode et de ses applications selon la perspective d'un informaticien plutôt que celle d'un chercheur en recherche opérationnelle. Une attention particulière est portée aux structures de données pour supporter l'implantation de cette méthode et à ses aspects reliés à l'intelligence artificielle. De plus, le travail décrit certaines applications de la recherche avec tabous plus significatives du point de vue de l'informatique et tente de comprendre l'influence possible sur cette méthode de nouveaux modèles de calcul qui viennent de sciences comme la physique et la biologie.

The port and industrial development activity work group of the Fraser River Estuary Management Program (FREMP) was formed to examine development trends and future land requirements for industries requiring sites with access to the waters of the Fraser River estuary. The work group determined the supply of and demand for land from these industries for the next 20 years, identified and designated areas suitable for water-dependent industries; and prepared land use strategies that support the growth of these industries. This report assesses the major issues that affect waterfront industrial land development in the study area, although it does not account for broader global trends that may impact on the validity of the forecasted scenarios.

There are no published studies that compare reconnaissance geochemical surveys using lake sediment and vegetation. Similarly, there is no record of a detailed study that compares the geochemical responses of vegetation, soil and till around gold mineralization. This paper provides comparisons from the glaciated and forested terrain of eastern Nova Scotia. Centre-lake sediment samples of gyttja (organic rich ooze) were collected from 500 lakes. For a biogeochemical survey, composite samples of balsam fir twigs and needle growth from the past 5-7 years were collected at each of 600 sites adjacent to available roads and tracks. Both sample suites were analyzed for 35 elements.

by B.V. Funt, M.S. Drew and M. Brockington. Burnaby, B.C. : Simon Fraser University, Centre for Systems Science ; Laboratory for Computer and Communications Research, 1991. 21 p. : ill. Bibliogr.

MICROLOG 92-05828 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

Existing shape-from-shading algorithms assume constant reflectance across the shaded surface. Multi-coloured surfaces are excluded because both shading and reflectance affect the measured image intensity. Given a standard RGB colour image, the paper describes a method of eliminating the reflectance effects in order to calculate a shading field that depends only on the relative positions of the illuminant and surface. Reflectance changes are located and removed from the luminance image by thresholding the gradient of its logarithm at locations of abrupt chromaticity change. By applying the new curl-correction technique at the thresholded locations, the thresholding is improved and the gradient fields are forced to be conservative. The resulting Poisson equation is solved directly by the Fourier transform method. Experiments with real images are presented.

The tidal sportfishing diary program is a mail survey of resident B.C. tidal water anglers introduced in 1979 as a method of estimating recreational catch and effort. The visitors sportfishing survey was first conducted in 1982 to obtain estimates of sport catch and expenditures by anglers visiting B.C. during the previous year. Previous reports cover survey developments and annual reports. This report services as a continuation of this series and deals with the 1989-90 results. It presents the results of the mail survey, categorizing returns by population of resident and visitor anglers, catch, effort, and catch and effort by juvenile anglers. A discussion of the methodology is included.

A five-year predevelopment monitoring study was initiated in the mid-1980s to determine the effects of future offshore oil and gas production on the birds that use the coastal areas of the Beaufort Sea. The study determined the natural annual fluctuations in the abundance, breeding effort, and breeding success of the study's indicator species, the red-throated loon. Four study plots were searched by helicopter to obtain total counts of red-throated loon pairs, nests, eggs, and chicks. The status of loon nesting territories was checked on foot every three to five days from mid-June to early September at a fifth study plot. Data were also collected on the abundance of fish, predators, alternative prey for the predators, and several weather-related factors. This report presents the results of the five-year monitoring program, including a discussion of its limitations.

MICROLOG 92-00312 2 fiche

This project monitored the effect of future offshore oil and gas development on the birds that use the coastal areas of the Beaufort Sea. A preliminary investigation in 1984 indicated that the Red-throated loon would be a suitable indicator species for monitoring due to its vulnerability to the proposed development, its abundance in the Beaufort Sea region, and the conspicuous nature of its nests and chicks. Monitoring was conducted each year for abundance of loon pairs, their breeding effort, and their success. This report covers the five-year predevelopment phase of the study which will provide a benchmark for monitoring once full scale development has occurred.

Reduction reconsidered : further investigation of a mechanism for searching for regularity in data

MICROLOG 92-05426 1 fiche (Available on fiche only)

Recently, Wu (Wu 88) proposed a method called Reduction for searching for regularities in experimental data. Reduction was described as a polynomial-time algorithm that is both more efficient than the methods used in BACON, ABACUS, and COPER, and sufficiently powerful to make significant scientific discoveries in uncultivated domains, meaning a scientific field where observational data are being accumulated and need to be analyzed for numerical relationships. This paper examines Reduction to identify the conditions required to permit its claimed efficiency and the corresponding limitations in its applicability. Reduction is briefly described and an algorithm is presented based on the description of the method given in Wu's paper. Also, complexity analyses of Basic and Universal Reduction are given. Unstated assumptions made in the design of Reduction are explicitly documented. The particular class of problems for which Basic Reduction is applicable is characterized, and a more efficient algorithm for such problems is proposed. Conclusions and suggestions for further research are also presented.

The use of defoamers contaminated with non-chlorinated dibenzofuran (DBF) and dibenzo-p-dioxin (DBD) in chlorine bleaching pulp mills has been shown to significantly increase the 2378-TCDF and 2378-TCDD levels of the final bleached pulp. To reduce amounts of these toxicants in pulp mill discharges, Environment Canada is developing regulations that will establish the maximum concentrations of DBF and DBD in defoamers for those applications. This report is an analytical method for the determination DBF and DBD in defoamers at low (ng/g) levels. The report gives general information on the scope and application, principle and theory, interferences, and sample storage of defoamers; the apparatus and reagents to be used; procedures; calculations; and quality control and method performance.

The methodology is used to identify and quantify trace amounts of polychlorinated dibenzo-para-dioxins (PCDDs) and polychlorinated dibenzofurans (PCDFs) in pulp and paper mill effluents. The method detection limit depends on sample matrix characteristics and can be as low as 2-20 pg/L (parts per quadrillion) for PCDD and PCDF congeners. The report describes sample collection, extraction, cleanup, chromatographic separation, and identification and quantification of tetra- through octa-CDD/PCDF congeners, including 2,3,7,8-tetrachlorodibenzo-para-dioxin (2,3,7,8-TCDD) and 2,3,7,8-tetrachlorodibenzofuran (2,3,7,8-TCDF).

The reputation of phenol formaldehyde (PF) resins as strong, durable, and reliable wood adhesives has led to their use in plywood manufacture. The demands for increased panel production volumes and cost efficiency has revealed some curing and application limitations in certain PF formulations. Preliminary experiments have established that filler free adhesives for bonding higher moisture content veneers can be formed with mixtures of insoluble phenolic dispersions with soluble phenolic resin. This project used this technology to formulate a PF system combining high and low molecular weight components which are suitable for bonding veneer of between 8-10 percent moisture content; develop procedures for preparing and applying large scale quantities of these adhesives; and conduct a limited number of mill trials with these formulations.

This study evaluates the long-run impacts of four alternative forms of fiscal federalism on each of the Canadian regions. The first three envision a Canada where the federal government's relations with the different provinces remain largely symmetrical but in which responsibility for federal programs is increasingly transferred to the provinces. In the fourth scenario, treatment of the provinces is asymmetrical, as the transfer of program responsibility is made to one province alone. CA CO ST

Regulation of forest practices in various jurisdictions

by S. Hadway. Victoria : Ministry of Forests, Integrated Resources Branch, 1990. 26 p.
 MICROLOG 92-03431 1 fiche

The legislative and regulatory provisions for governing forest practices in the jurisdictions of Alaska, California, Idaho, Maine, Montana, Oregon, Washington, Tasmania, and the U.S. National Forests were reviewed to determine how old growth forest management and protection has been dealt with in forest land management. The forest acts, the forest practices acts, and codes which define the rules and regulations for each were reviewed. This report provides a summary of the approaches used by the various jurisdictions to govern forest practices related to old growth characteristics, including harvest methods, reforestation and conservation. Relevant sections of the documents are also identified and summarized.

 MICROLOG 92-04597 1 fiche

In 1989 and again following the transfer of responsibility for electricity policy to the Minister of Energy in January 1990, the government received suggestions and comments from the private utilities, municipal utilities and industrial consumers on electric utility planning and regulation in Alberta. The Dept. of Energy initiated a review to determine whether changes could improve the effectiveness of regulation. Assisting is a task force of representatives of the investor-owned and municipal utilities, industrial consumers, Rural Electrification Associations, municipalities and small power producers, with regulators as observers. In meetings in 1991, the Task Force identified key issues and relevant options. This report summarizes these and presents preliminary recommendations.

MICROLOG 92-05143 1 fiche

The identification of terrain that will be subject to high frequencies of landslides following clearcut logging and road building is top priority for forest management in coastal B.C. and the Queen Charlotte Islands in particular. This paper addresses post-logging landslide frequencies related to individual landscape attributes and combinations of landscape attributes. The relationships described are used for the development of multifactor classifications for slope hazard mapping. The study was restricted to logged areas that were from 6-15 years old. Clearcut areas were stratified by underlying bedrock formation and numbered in a systematic way. A subset of areas from each formation was then randomly selected for study and landslides that could be clearly identified from air photos at 1:20,000 scale were included. Landslides identified in the field that were 0.05 ha or larger and had occurred after the air photos were also included. The terrain within each selected area was mapped at a 1:20,000 scale in a system that indicated geologic materials, material textures, surface morphology, and any active or inactive geomorphic processes present.

A Relevance logic characterization of static discontinuity grammars

This paper gives a characterization of static discontinuity grammars (SDGs), a logic grammar formalism due to Dahl. A relevance logic sequent calculus proof system is given which is shown to be equivalent to SDGs for parsing problems, in the sense that a string of terminal symbols is accepted by a grammar if and only if the corresponding sequent is derivable in the calculus. One calculus is given for each of the two major interpretations of SDGs and the two calculi differ by only a small restriction in one rule. The paper also explores the conceptual connection between relevance logic and grammar formalisms in general.

Ontario's pulp and paper industry relies primarily on black spruce. Shortfalls are anticipated and balsam fir is an important alternate source of high-quality conifer fibre. The normal yield tables developed by Plonski are used routinely by forest managers in Ontario. Since balsam fir is not included in these tables, the values for black spruce are usually substituted. This study examines the validity of applying Plonski's black spruce normal yield tables to obtain growth and yield estimates for balsam fir in northern Ontario.

Des parcelles d'échantillonnage, qui avaient été établies en 1984 (sur des plantations datant de 1979), ont été contrôlées en 1989. Les mesures provenant de quarante-huit parcelles d'échantillonnage ont été compilées afin d'évaluer le développement, en taille et en diamètre, des arbres plantés. En plus des mesures de taille et de diamètre des arbres, on a évalué la densité de peuplement des plantations en conifères indigènes et en feuillus. Un grand nombre de plantations présentaient un surpeuplement de conifères. Dans environ quatorze pour cent de l'aire évaluée, les feuillus entraînent en compétition avec les conifères à raison d'au delà de cinq cents arbres par hectare.

This project trains teachers to use television as an educational tool for the child centred teaching strategies being encouraged by the board. 8 teachers were trained, and worked with other teachers. A two to three year time frame was set and active support from the school board and principals was established. The 8 teachers were interviewed at the end of the 1st year. They describe how the project affected their teaching and how their students' behaviour and learning were affected. They were successful in fostering positive attitudes towards school television and in encouraging the use of videotape programs. They also describe initial activities in working with other teachers and evaluate the training sessions provided by TVOntario. In the next year of the project, the teachers would like to continue demonstrating the techniques they have learned to other teachers. The board can expect to gain both a large number of teachers skilled in using television, and first-hand experience with the peer coaching approach to teacher training.

Both Montreal and Vancouver shared in the gains of the economic expansion and their rental markets are influenced by the same national interest rate and taxation environment, yet their rental markets do not appear to have performed in a manner consistent with the theoretical operation of markets. In B.C., rent controls ended in 1983 and in the 1988-1990 period the market in Vancouver was characterized by very low vacancy rates and large rent increases. Despite these positive influences, new private rental production was limited. In contrast, rental production in Montreal has been high despite escalating vacancies in both the new and existing rental stock and the fact that a form of rent control applies in Quebec. This study accounts for the contrasting performance of the rental markets in Vancouver and Montreal, assesses whether the Vancouver rental market has failed and, if so, to ascertain what governments can do to restore the market.

The objectives of this paper are to develop an accurate description of the Winnipeg rental housing stock, according to its spatial distribution by structural type, period of construction, and inventory share; and to identify rental housing sub-markets based on the spatial distribution of supply characteristics. The spatial distribution and identified sub-markets of Winnipeg's rental housing supply are compared to the conventional patterns of urban land use models, and the processes underlying these models are explored. Potential areas for further research and policy development are discussed.

For the past several years, contaminant concentrations were measured in sediments collected from sites in the Fraser River and Boundary Bay. Where elevated contaminant concentrations were found, it was observed that generally the particular sediment sample had a greater portion of the smallest particle size. While reviewing the analytical data, it was also found that criteria did not exist which could be used to determine if the measured concentrations were environmentally significant. The June 1990 monitoring program was begun to determine if elevated contaminant concentrations and toxic properties were associated with a particular particle size fraction. Sediments were collected from four sites which had been previously sampled, three in the Fraser River and one in Boundary Bay. Three replicate samples were obtained at each of the four sites. The samples were separated into two particle size classes and analytical tests were performed on the size classes for a variety of organic and inorganic variables. Toxic properties associated with particular particle size classes were determined using the microtox bioluminescence and echinoderm (sand dollar) sperm cell bioassays.

The purpose of this study was to evaluate what interventions aimed at enhancing employability work best for particular types of participants such as the able bodied unemployed. Six evaluation issues were examined to answer this question: did the project assist the participants in obtaining and maintaining employment? Did the project end/reduce that participants' dependence on social assistance? Did the project strengthen the participants' personal sense of employment readiness? Did the product improve the participants' financial situation? What were the costs of the program compared to social assistance? And what intervention contributes most to increasing employability? This document presents facts, findings, and conclusions of the study.

Report on the failure of Mound Red Park Reservoir (Muskeg Creek Dam) : engineering report

by K. McEwen. Edmonton : Alberta Environment, Water Resources Management Services, Dam Safety Branch, 1991. 30 p. : ill., maps.
MICROLOG 92-00074 1 fiche

Mound Red Park Reservoir (Muskeg Creek) is located 10 km south of the summer village of Ma-Me-O Beach. The reservoir construction was begun in the early 1960s and in 1968 a concrete chute spillway was located at the south end of the dam. A structural steel pedestrian bridge was built across the spillway inlet channel in 1970. In October 1988, a feasibility study was undertaken to consider raising the existing reservoir full supply level by 1 and 2 metres respectively, and to improve the deteriorating fish habitat. A report was issued in November 1989. On July 3, 1990, the Muskeg Creek Dam overtopped and failed. This report gives details of the events leading up to the failure and suggests possible causes.

Fisheries studies conducted on the lower Nelson River system in 1988 have continued the pattern set by earlier studies. Research began with a resource inventory in 1985 and developed to include impact assessment and mitigation or enhancement investigations. In 1988, a resource inventory of McMillan and 12-Mile Creeks was conducted to increase the understanding of brook trout stocks in the Limestone River system. Baseline data collection in the Conawapa Forebay portion of the Nelson River was initiated in 1988 through gill netting and drift sampling to inventory fish populations and assess the importance of various habitat types to fish species. Particular emphasis was placed on lake sturgeon. Three long-term monitoring projects were continued in 1988.

for the more valuable softwood stock (natural or planted) during the early stages of their development. Two separate studies were undertaken in 1990 to determine the success of the program. The first was an intensive ground survey to assess efficacy on competing species. This was conducted pre-spray (June and July 1989) and post-spray (June and July 1990) and was carried out randomly on 45 percent of the areas treated. The second was an extensive aerial survey to assess spray coverage, conducted from the last week in June to the second week of July 1990. At C-CORE, almost all research projects are carried out on a cooperative basis with industry or government, sometimes with both sectors as well with the involvement of various universities. This is a strategy established by C-CORE a number of years earlier to make the most efficient use of the human, financial, and logistic resources available. Industry and government groups are also involved in project planning. This paper describes the key elements of the management system, its implementation, and the process as it moves from idea to commercialization.

Residential exposure to 60-Hz magnetic fields from appliances

by D.L. Mader and S.B. Peralta. Toronto : Ontario Hydro, Research Division, 1991.

27 p. : ill. Bibliogr. (Report ; no. 91-89-K)

MICROLOG 92-02026 1 fiche

The majority of studies which attempt to link 60-Hz magnetic fields to the development of various forms of cancer in humans lack a method for direct assessment of magnetic field exposure levels. The sources of residential magnetic fields include high-voltage transmission lines, distribution lines, building wiring, and appliances, although controversy exists over the relative contribution of appliances to the total residential field. This report uses a simple model to calculate magnetic field exposure levels from appliances, enabling assessment of their contribution to the total residential field. The appliance was first replaced by a magnetic dipole source, then the average spatial field was obtained by averaging over the volume between two concentric spherical shells defined by the appliance dimensions and the position of the subject related to the appliance. Finally, the time-weighted exposure level was obtained by considering the duty cycle of the appliance. Detailed calculations using a group of appliances were used to illustrate application of the model, and to infer order-of-magnitude estimates for exposure levels from specific appliances.

Le deuxième objectif est de voir si des vérifications ponctuelles, réparties sur plusieurs secteurs différents dans la province, confirment le comportement des résidus tel qu'il a été observé dans la première partie de cette étude et également dans les études antérieures. Finalement, un test a été réalisé avec les échantillons ponctuels afin de vérifier si un lavage des fruits peut diminuer de façon significative les résidus de glyphosate. The key to a full understanding of ship powering performance is an accurate knowledge of ship resistance, propulsor performance, and the hydrodynamic (including ice) interaction between the two. This requires direct measurement of ship resistance, which has proven very difficult on technical, logistic, and cost grounds. This project measured the full-scale resistance and propulsive performance in level ice of two modern icebreakers and the effect of the presence of ice on the interaction forces between the hulls and propulsion systems. Two Caspar Arctic Class IV vessels, the MV Terry Fox and the MV Ikaluk, were selected for testing. One has ducted propellers, the other open propellers, and both are operated by Gulf Canada Resources Limited. Three days of dedicated tests were conducted in Herschel Basin, Yukon from June 11-13, 1990. Five towing trials and over 50 self-propulsion tests were performed. The paper first reviews the characteristics and appropriateness of principled negotiation and its place in the decision-making process; characterizes forest land-use conflicts in B.C.; describes the wilderness allocation processes and public involvement in them; and discusses the obstacles to, and opportunities for, the use of principled negotiation.

The effects of lowered stream pH from hydrogen ion pulses during rainstorms and snowmelt on most stream biota are well documented, but their effects on blackflies is not. It may be that blackflies are more tolerant of stream acidity than many other stream inhabitants. This study examined the ability of different blackfly species to survive snowmelt acid pulses by subjecting larvae to simulated snowmelt pH depressions using artificial stream channels located adjacent to the outflow of Plastic Lake, Haliburton County, Ontario. Larvae were collected from Costello Creek, Algonquin Park, Ontario, so that they would not be accustomed to acidity. Three reservoirs were used, one with acid water, one with stream water, and the third as a control. All had as much water vegetation and inhabitants as possible and three runs of two experiments were conducted. This report presents the results of the experiments

Responsive institutions for a modern Canada

Ottawa : Government of Canada, 1991. 26 p. ISBN 0-662-19177-3
MICROLOG 92-03024 1 fiche

The government of Canada has proposed reform of the House of Commons, an elected Senate, decision-making authority for federal-provincial consultative machinery and greater provincial and regional sensitivity in decision making by relevant federal regulatory agencies and national cultural institutions. It has also proposed to strengthen the Supreme Court of Canada by entrenching a process to provide provincial and territorial input to appointments to the Court. This paper provides Canadians with more detail about these proposals and the reasons why the Government is recommending them for consideration.

Le rapport (partie I) présente un résumé de la géologie générale et des modèles de piégeage des hydrocarbures, suivi d'un chapitre sur l'histoire de l'exploration du bassin de Jeanne d'Arc. Le chapitre le plus long porte sur la géologie du pétrole et la délimitation des types de zones pétrolières utilisées dans l'évaluation. La partie II qui constitue le dernier chapitre traite des évaluations des ressources du bassin de Jeanne d'Arc en indiquant les répercussions des nouvelles évaluations sur le taux de découverte et l'approvisionnement futur.

This report chronicles the changes occurring in the system of communities serving rural Saskatchewan. It briefly discusses theory and method and provides an overview of the changes in the structure of the trade-centre system during the past thirty years. It also focuses on particular factors that may have had a greater influence in some areas of the province than others, or on some types of communities than others.

This report documents the results of a model test program to ascertain the icebreaking efficiency, ice clearing ability, open water resistance, and sea-keeping performance of a hull form which was generated by software. A test program was devised using the existing model of the original R-class ice-breaker to act as the benchmark against which the performance of the conceptual bow form could be compared. The model tests were carried out in both the ice tank and the towing tank at the Institute for Marine Dynamics in St. John's, Newfoundland during April 1990. Calm water resistance and seakeeping experiments were performed in the towing tank, and level ice resistance and presawn ice resistance experiments were performed in the ice tank.

The production of paper products in the Kraft process involves the removal of lignin from the pulpwood, leaving the desirable cellulose component. This process requires digestion of the wood in a combination of sodium sulphide and sodium hydroxide, known as 'white liquor'. As the process proceeds, the white liquor acquires substantial quantities of lignins and other materials and is called 'black liquor'. The black liquor is of variable consistency and concentration at different stages of the process and is a waste product which is toxic to vegetation at high levels. This report is a summary of information derived to date on the phytotoxicity of black liquor seeping from a holding lagoon at a container board recycling plant at Trenton. A sample of the black liquor was used in tests which included greenhouse exposures of growing plants and of germination tests in the laboratory.

Study examining the effects of varying amounts of paper birch on growth of 7-11-year-old Douglas-fir in the Interior Cedar-Hemlock zone of the southern interior of B.C. Competitive interactions in five birch-dominated Douglas-fir plantations were retrospectively examined using a neighbourhood approach, where the size of target Douglas-fir was related to the density, size and proximity of neighbouring birch. The neighbourhood measures were chosen based on the assumption that paper birch affects Douglas-fir growth primarily through competition for light. Ecological competition thresholds identified at each site were the birch density at which competition began and Douglas-fir growth was limited, and the birch density at which Douglas-fir growth became independent of birch density.

Reverse osmosis pilot program at Dare Candy

CH2M Hill Engineering Ltd. Toronto : Ministry of the Environment, Waste Management Branch, 1992. iii, 28 p. : ill. ISBN 0-7729-9313-0
MICROLOG 92-05294 1 fiche

Dare Food (Candy Division) Ltd. commissioned a candy manufacturing plant in Milton, Ontario in 1988. The plant is highly automated but significant volumes of water are still needed for cleaning and vessel and pipe washouts. The resultant wastewater has a very high BOD5 due to the sugar and starch product ingredients. Dare Foods is presently discharging over its limit of BOD5 by sending processing shift wastewater directly to the Town of Milton's sanitary sewer system. This report presents the results of a study to determine if reverse osmosis treatment of the wastewater could produce a high quality permeate capable of meeting the Town of Milton's sanitary sewer discharge criteria for TSS and BOD5, and produce a concentrate of suitable quality to be marketable as an animal feed supplement. If the pilot tests are encouraging, operating parameters, preliminary design criteria, and an order of magnitude capital cost estimate for a full-scale plant would be made.

The Canadian Council of Ministers of the Environment (CCME) initiated a program to remediate contaminated sites which threaten health or environmental quality. The CCME then established the Subcommittee on Environmental Quality Criteria for Contaminated Sites which conducted a comprehensive review of clean-up (remediation) criteria and respective approaches regulatory agencies from various parts of the world have developed; provided an up-to-date information base of these criteria; and recommended a set of interim criteria and a method for establishing consistent and scientifically-based environmental quality criteria suitable for assessing and remediating contaminated sites in Canada. This report presents the review of remediation criteria developed by Alberta, B.C., California, CCME, The Netherlands, New Jersey, Ontario, Quebec, and the United Kingdom, suggests an approach to developing criteria; and presents interim criteria.

Review of the 1989-90 British Columbia herring fishery and spawn abundance

Pacific herring migrate to inshore areas from offshore feeding grounds in the early fall and winter and then hold in sheltered bays and inlets in preparation for spawning in late winter and early spring. The food and bait fishery is conducted in November/December when the herring first move inshore and the fat content is high, and the sac-roe and spawn-on-kelp fisheries occur in March/April during the spawning season when gonad development is near or at maximum. When the herring have finished spawning, measurements of individual spawns are made to obtain estimates of abundance. This information is combined with data on catch and age composition to estimate the overall herring abundance and age class strength and to forecast the amount of herring that will return to spawn during the next year. This report presents information on the 1989/90 herring fishery and spawn abundance by district.

Thirty years of daily meteorological data from 37 locations in the Maritime provinces were analyzed to determine the heat units available for silage and grain corn production (CHU). Dates for starting and ending seasonal CHU accumulations were estimated for each year at each location. Yearly data were then subjected to probability analyses to determine availability of CHU at various risk levels. Linear regression equations were used to estimate available CHU for selected probability levels from the mean value and to estimate the probability of selected CHU thresholds being exceeded. Heat unit requirements of corn hybrids recommended for silage and grain production in 1990 were evaluated.

Étant donné sa grande qualité et son rendement saisonnier élevé et uniforme, la luzerne est devenue une des principales cultures fourragères dans la plupart des fermes de l'Ontario. C'est une plante vivace qui peut vivre jusqu'à cinq ans ou plus mais, souvent, les luzernières subissent un éclaircissage naturel sévère avant la troisième année d'exploitation. S'il comprend les causes possibles de ce dépérissement, le producteur sera plus en mesure d'améliorer les chances de survie de cette culture. Cette fiche technique aborde le risque de destruction de la luzerne par l'hiver. Elle se penche sur l'âge du peuplement, la variété, les réserves du sol en potassium, le drainage du sol, le moment de récolte, le nombre de coupes par saison de culture, la période de repos automnal, la flexibilité du calendrier des coupes automnales, et le risque de destruction hivernale de la luzerne.

Installation of plant material was conducted in spring 1986 and further surface seeding was done in 1988 because of problems with rooting and establishment of plant material. In 1988 an experiment was also begun to evaluate the effect of species and fertilization on establishment of brush layers. This report summarizes the final evaluations of the bioengineering project. It covers the monitoring in 1988 and 1989 of the original installation, describes the performance of surface seeding that was done on the site in 1988, and presents results of the brush layer experiment planted in 1988.

Etude le rôle de l'école de langue française en Ontario, en tant qu'institution sociale d'une minorité linguistique. Le concept de "maintenir la langue et la culture françaises" correspond à l'idée du maintien de barrières sociales et donc d'une identité sociale, ou d'une identité ethnique. Les institutions sociales, telle l'école, contribuent à la distribution de ressources culturelles, linguistiques et matérielles par le biais de la création de rapports sociaux. Un portrait global démolinguistique, est présenté, de la clientèle des écoles de langue française avec l'analyse des entrevues de différents types de familles, et de leurs attitudes envers le maintien de la langue et de la culture françaises, surtout par le biais de la scolarisation en français. Les conditions ne favorisent pas le développement des bases d'une identité ethnique française qui regrouperait tous les membres de la clientèle.
